HOFER BROTHERS, Editors.

SPECIAL EDITOR.

THE WEEKLY CAPITAL JOURNAL of Friday, June 27th, will be specially arranged to meet the demands for information by parties in the Eastern States.

An exhaustive review as to the situation of the fruit crop, and containing valuable facts about fruit growing, is being prepared by a gentleman who has devoted his whole life to the development of the fruit industry in the Willamette valley. The edition will contain other valuable matter.

Our large eastern circulation, and the fact that Salem real estate men circulate thousands of copies of these papers, makes it a very desirable edition to advertise lands for sale. We throw our columns open to all the towns of the valley; rates for advertising space will be found to be reasonable.

CAPITAL JOURNAL PUB. CO.

WHY THEY VOTED FOR PENNOYER.

Oregonian June 12: A factional row in Portland took 2000 republican votes away from Mr. Thompson and transferred them to Mr. Pennoyer, making a difference of 400 in the result; the "union party," that cast several thousand votes for its own ticket, with the exception of governor, voted solidly for Pennoyer, and very large numbers of republican voters in the rural districts voted for Pennoyer, under the impression that thereby they could succeed in collecting taxes from municipal bonds.

That very large number of republicans voted for Pennoyer no one can doubt. Salem precincts gave Thompson about four hundred majority, but Pennoyer got nearly as much majority in "the rural districts" of Marion county, so that Thompson had only 17 majority in a county that gave average majorities of 600 on the county ticket.

It may be assumed with safety, that it can never be known with certainty, that Governor Pennoyer received a majority of the republican votes in Marion county outside of Salem. In the contest between Pennoyerism and the Oregonian, the organ of monopolies is knocked out by about 700 to go on, in about the strongest republican county in the state. No matter what else is determined in this election, the Oregonian no longer has great influence with a majority of republican voters.

But the fact that so many republicans voted for Governor Pennoyer is not so important as the reason why they did so. That reason is always stated only partially by the Oregonian. To take the curse off the proposition involved in the issue of non-taxable bonds that paper always refers to it as a kind of public enterprise, a charitable purpose, a means to relieve the municipality from the payment of taxes on such bonds, etc., when it is no such thing. It is merely a proposition to create a species of very desirable securities and exempt the owner from paying taxes thereon.

That was what the republicans who voted for Pennoyer rejected. It was because he represented opposition to that idea, that they voted for him, and if the people had to vote primarily upon the proposition of creating those non-taxable securities they would express themselves much more emphatically than they did on June 24.

CLEVELAND AND SILVER.

The following is from the Economist, a paper published as the organ of the Farmers Alliance and Trades Unions:

The fact should not be forgotten that the Democratic platform of 1889 and 1894 declared in favor of the free coinage of silver.—Atlanta Constitution.

It would have been fair if the Constitution had added that the Democrats elected a president in 1884 who repudiated the platform between election and entering into office by a widely published letter which had the effect of preventing any effort on the part of his party to secure the free coinage of silver. The same president took occasion in an annual message to recommend the repeal of the limited coinage of silver under the Bland act. Does the Constitution desire that man's repudiation?

Present indications are, that that man will be re-nominated. His record and the records of his party are in strong contrast with the republican party. We are going forward and they are constantly polling backwards.

The CAPITAL JOURNAL has been evidently been soured upon some time. He says: "Women love with their ears, flatter with their lips, hate with their eyes."—Dallas Observer.

BREAKING IN A CAYUSE.

There was a great excitement on the streets of Salem the other day, and a large crowd of people gathered to see a man perform the operation of breaking a cayuse. The cayuse is a cross between the native Oregon horse and the Indian pony, though many call the pure bred Indian pony by the same name. It is an animal not of the highest type of equine intelligence, but possessed of wonderful endurance and almost indestructible durability. They are wonderfully adapted to climbing the great mountain ranges, traveling long distances, freighting in the mountains and performing miscellaneous farm work when well broke. They are above all a very useful saddle horse.

The scene on the street was a quite common one, and would have wrung tears of pity from the iron heart of a Boston hitching post, or any other object that had ever been most remotely brought under the influence of the National Humane Education Society. An unbroken cayuse had been subjected between the long pair of shafts of a breaking cart—a two-wheeled vehicle, heavy enough to not be easily overturned, and with the animal far enough away from the driver to make that person safe from the rather lively heels of the impetuous animal, whose spirit is to be broken and subjugated to the will of his superior. This cayuse had never before been hitched up. Tho' well broke to the saddle or to be led, he has yet to learn to draw well and the first steps he took in this direction would indicate that he would rather break his neck, or the driver's neck, than ever consent to master that useful art of pulling.

At length the straps are in place and the two men at the animals head step aside and the cayuse is turned loose in the street. By this time a crowd of several hundred have gathered and there is great excitement all about the poor dumb brute, not endowed with too much intelligence at best. After one stupid, wild glare the animal leaps in the air, rears up behind, kicks out with all four feet, and falls flat on the ground with a groan. He is raised up, only to repeat the performance which has apparently amused the crowd, tho' the fall evidently has hurt the horse not a little. He tries to go again and the excited throng crowd up closer. Then he strikes out with his fore feet, throws himself from one side to the other, shakes his head madly trying to dislodge the head-stall, and after exhausting himself in his frantic plunges, falls again heavily to the earth. This time his mouth is filled with blood and the animal is nearly exhausted. Still he sulks and strikes and resists all efforts to coax or drive him to take one step ahead.

The cruel and heroic method of treatment goes on. Perhaps it will take several days to subjugate the animal and utterly break his will so that he will drag his cart. He may never be broke to do it. When he is broke in this way he is never safe. At any rate it would be a kindness to take the horse into an open meadow or field, in place of making him break his neck here in the midst of an excited crowd and on the hard pavement.

An old Oregonian says he has broke a great many of these semi-wild horses without ever using a bit of force or having a bit of risk to run. His method is to put one strap on them at a time. Lead them with a harness on their back and gradually accustom the animal to having the harness strapped on. In the same gentle way teach the animal to draw a light weight and by drawing out his intelligence educate him to understand what is wanted. More horses are spoiled and made unreliable for all purposes by the brutal methods employed by some horse trainers, than are ever "broke."

It is one of man's confessions of weakness when he must lay aside his God-given intelligence and mental superiority and employ brute force and physical strength to make another man, child or animal obey him. Reason, persuasion, kindness and love, will accomplish wonders, where force only degrades, brutalizes and renders more force necessary.

These methods of training horses for driving explains in a large degree why so many unreliable horses are found on the coast, and why so many dangerous and fatal runaways take place. If it could be established that no more lasting injury can be done an animal, to whom human lives are constantly to be entrusted, than to be broken to drive in this cruel and brutal way, that always leaves an ineradicable impression of ugliness, sickness and viciousness deep-seated in the animal's nature, people would not buy horses that had been broken in this manner and the practice would be stopped. People who feel for the brute creation, should help along the education of public sentiment in this direction. No animal suffers more from human ignorance than this one, upon whose faithfulness man most depends and especially in the west, where other transportation facilities are not yet fully developed.

The people of the afflicted parts of the Dakotas have not yet got so poor but what they can afford to import a great deal of whiskey and maintain a lively opposition to the prohibitory law.

The Bennett law is the lively issue in politics in Wisconsin. Briefly put, it requires parents to see that their children are taught the English language. Still there are some who claim that the teaching of English is an assault upon some churches.

Drain Echo: A ledge of iron ore has been discovered on Plinn Cooper's place, at Robert's hill, Douglas county. Mr. Cooper tells us that it assays 60 per cent. iron, and there is an inexhaustible quantity of it. The iron mines of Douglas county are no doubt destined to become famous.

The Chicago Evening Journal: Oregon did pretty well. The governor is democratic, but the other state officers are republican by 5000 to 10000 majority; the republican congress man has 9000 majority, and the legislature is two-thirds republican. That is a good send-off for an off year.

W. D. Howell's new story, "The Shadow of a Dream" has just been published by Messrs. Harper & Brothers. Some critics consider it such a tale as Poe or Hawthorne might have conceived, and detect in it a return to Mr. Howell's earlier romantic vein as exemplified in his Undiscovered Country; though they admit, as the Boston Traveller says, that "it is held with a firmer hand, and determined by a finer artistic treatment."

St. Louis Republic, (dem): It will be an eternal shame on a democratic legislature if the Louisiana lottery bill is passed. The bill will probably be reported to the house in a day or two and the question soon decided. The friends of morality and decency have had a hard fight, the principal New Orleans newspapers being quite subservient to the lottery influence, but there is hope that sufficient public feeling has been awakened to make impossible the adoption of a measure which is intended to make the state and its citizens sharers in the profits of this shameless scheme of robbery.

The single fact that the lottery company can afford to pay a million a year for its franchise shows conclusively what a swindle it must be.

Warning to Wisconsin Democrats.

Chicago Herald, Dem: The Herald must repeat its warning to the democrats of Wisconsin in terms even more vigorous than those that have been used heretofore. They should resolutely repudiate the dangerous and destructive dogma that there is a power in the state that is above the state and they should speak with relation to public education in tones so clear that there may be no misapprehension. The Lutherans and German Catholics of Wisconsin have no real grievance. They are not persecuted. They are not oppressed. The Bennett law is a wise and beneficial measure. The attacks that have been made upon it have been dishonest. They indicate that the churches have taken the offensive against the state—not, as ecclesiastics and others falsely allege, that the state has taken the offensive against the churches. Based on this anti-Bennett law movement is upon false pretense, it certainly must fail, and the democratic party should not be permitted to fall with it. The most that any reasonable person can ask is that the law be amended in one or two unimportant particulars. If the democracy of Wisconsin goes beyond this it will go blunderingly to merited defeat.
