THE CHRONICLE.

That is the name of a San Francisco paper that is truly great—great in aspirations material and ideal. It comes out June 23d in an issue of 60 pages, columns wide and full of the history of its growth and of the development of its city and state. A full page is devoted to illustration of the new Chronicle building—nine story and basement, besides a noble square tower half as high again.

The Chronicle is a national newspaper in its devotion to those things dear to the hearts of a great mass of America's progressive citizens. It is a loyal paper and has always shown a proper spirit towards our great men, towards the Union, the nation's flag, and toward our national industries. It is a free silver paper and as a rule emphasizes those measures of the republican party which are of the most moment to the people.

In the field of journalistic ethics the Chronicle is high in its standards. The first leader in the new Chronicle is significant—a tribute to the English world-poet Browning—"a genuine poet at heart." Reviewing the 25 years past the Chronicle asserts that the period has seen no backward steps for the Pacific coast. It says:

"The rate of progression has not been uniform, but at no time since 1866 have there been any evidences of retrogression, either in California or upon the Pacific coast as a whole. The currents of increasing population have veered hither and thither, as is always the case in a new country, but the cohesive attraction has never ceased and those who have come here have remained."

In discussing the wonderful growth of the city of San Francisco the Chronicle makes one important point so clearly that we cannot forego the opportunity to give it to our readers. Speaking of that city's rapid growth it argues that "it enforces the oft-repeated lesson that intelligent individual effort, seconded by wisdom and prudence on the part of the governing body of the municipality, far outweigh the much vaunted and over-estimated natural advantages. No city builds itself. It is created by the enterprise and self-sacrifice of its citizens, and by the judicious expenditure of public money for public improvements; and San Francisco, though much is left to be desired, may honestly congratulate herself that the era of procrastination and retrogression is over, and that her people have educated themselves into the knowledge of the real needs and wants of the city."

It is also significant that a great newspaper, in outlining its political policy for the future, should not hesitate to speak in plain terms of one of the great issues of the day, the monopolistic control of vast departments of the public service by private corporations. Speaking of its record in the past it also says: "It has consistently waged the fight of the people against the exactions and iniquities of corporations, and has upheld the grand doctrine formulated by the martyred Lincoln, that this and should be a government of the people, by the people and for the people."

The careful student of this nation's economic conditions must be forced to the conclusion that the wonderful expansion of the railroad system has taken place in a wasteful manner. In their greed for wealth parallel lines have been built in the interest of stock-wrecking enterprises. Rates of freight and passenger fares have been exacted to pay dividends on watered stock and interest on over-issues of mortgages, by means of which practices hundreds of millions have been taken from the earnings of the producer and laborer. Worse than this the various kinds of profitable corporations have prevented the development of the nation's waterways, and have prevented a reform of the currency in a truly national sense. The Chronicle is to be congratulated on being on the right side.

THE CONGREGATIONAL ASSOCIATION.

The Oregon Association of Congregational churches is in session at Salem. This is an important gathering, even to those outside of that church, as it represents over forty years of effort of an aggressive and united body of christian people. While in doctrine more or less Calvinistic, this church may be called one of the most progressive and truly representative of modern thought. In form of government it is marked by an almost pure independence, called Congregationalism; in the United States fellowship and counselling between churches has become a strong tenet of discipline. Still the right of self-government is claimed by each local church.

The relation of a church to the state is limited to its own conceptions of its legitimate field of labor. In some churches this conception includes pronouncing upon most moral and public questions. In others the work of the church is confined to purely personal and evangelic labors among the membership and unconverted. There is a social feature of the Congregational church where it wins thousands of men and women to its ranks, who would probably unite with no other denomination. It is popular with the young and welcomes social life and activity within the walls of the church. These are all evidences of the needs and demands of what is called modern social development, rather than any expansion of the true teaching of Christ and revealed religion.

Most churches of our times are in a slight degree tinctured with the lust of power for position and property among its theologians. The Andover controversy and revision of creed questions reveal the evolutions of the religion of humanity and of power out of the hands of dogmatists, and toward the universal ideals of love that are taught by Christ and Paul. The struggles over property and power in the United Brethren church and in the Evangelical church reveal the limited and imperfect ideals on the part of the modern churches. Property and power (on the part of the priesthood to say who shall be damned) are still the Scylla and Charibdis where are shattered the earthly vessels of truth. Temporal power over the affairs of this world, over wealth and society, is still the shining bauble that misleads so many of the best workers. It is now as it was in the days of the Jews, who demanded of Pilate the life of Christ because he would not set up a temporal kingdom, and as it has been with the church of Rome and the church of England in their lusts after power and dominion. But the ideal will triumph. The chains of deception and the shams of the material that enthral mankind are being broken, and Christ's kingdom of Love and a common brotherhood of man is coming nearer and nearer.

STRAWBERRIES.

This Fruit, as grown in the Willamette Valley, is the Marvel of the Eastern People.

The wonder of the world is the Willamette valley strawberry. For size, no part of the globe can begin to compare with us, and for taste and flavor there is no superior.

The earliest berry to ripen is the "First of the Season," a good sized berry but not so large as later varieties. The vine is productive and the fruit is delicious for table use.

The next to ripen is the Mammoth, a beautiful large berry, very prolific bearer, and of excellent taste and flavor. It is what is termed "a perfect bloomer," and is one of the staple berries of the valley, yielding large crops and finding a ready market.

There is also the Monarch of the West, a comparatively new variety here, being brought to this region in 1879, but it produces some of the largest and finest berries ever seen in this market, and for productiveness it has few if any equals, as much as sixteen hundred gallons having been picked from one acre, which, at the lowest usual price, brings $400.

The old reliables for this valley, however, are the Sharpless and the Wilson's Albany, and the latter especially for canning and preserving purposes. They are a good sized round, solid berry and most excellent in every respect. They grow profusely; their firmness makes them less liable to injury from rain and they are invariably a sure crop, while more tender varieties are more subject to climatic conditions.

There is also the Jucunda, a splendid berry in all respects; also Phelps' Seedling, called Old Iron Clad from its being so hardy in winter and drought-resisting in summer. There are many fancy varieties, such as the Jumbo, the Caxcomb and others, that grow to immense size, but they are untested on a large scale, and those who raise these fruits for market stick to the varieties that make a sure return and find a ready sale.

Speaking of the market, it is a fact that it is never glutted here and there is very little of the product shipped, though there is a constant demand for the fruit of this part of the valley to the north, south and east of us. The home consumption can scarcely be supplied yet and with the constant increase of manufacturing and other industrial pursuits, and the consequent growth of towns and cities, the demands of home consumers will require an increase of product and will always furnish good prices therefor. There is nothing can be made more successful in this part of Oregon than the intelligent cultivation of small fruits—the soil and climate being the most propitious in the whole country, and there being no large capital required to make a good start.

RASPBERRIES.

This fine fruit is also produced to perfection here, the red and black varieties vying with each other in their productiveness and general good qualities. Of the red, the Cuthbert, Turner, Marlboro and Hansel are the chief varieties cultivated. They are all good, with the Turner and Marlboro slightly the favorites.

Of the black, the Mammoth Cluster, the Gregg, Shaffer's Colossal, Souhegan and Tyler are in most general cultivation. The Souhegan is said by some to be the most valuable black raspberry now cultivated, being of good size, firm, a strong grower, a prodigious yielder, and ripens its entire crop in a very short time.

CURRENTS AND GOOSEBERRIES.

These fruits are not a whit behind those already named in their prolific productiveness or perfect formation. There are many varieties of the red, yellow and white currant, all of which make an excellent showing. The cherry currant grows to an immense size in these parts, often resembling at a little distance the average red cherry grown in the Eastern states; but for currant jelly or jam the little Red Dutch and the White Grape currant are less acid than the red, and are more for table use.

Of gooseberries, the Oregon Champion, the Downing, the Crown Bob and the Berkley are most in use. They grow to an immense size and are canned in large quantities, as they make excellent pies and sauce during the winter and spring.

The wild strawberry, raspberry and gooseberry are found in immense quantities in almost every locality, and furnish the most pleasurable pastime for children in their season.

Des Moines, Ia., News: No one doubts the permanency of Mary Anderson's marriage. She is too good a Catholic to resort to a divorce court. It is the glory of the Catholic church that it stands firm against the disintegration of society by the annulling of marriages in the easy-going modern fashion.

Out of the Fire

Tormented with Salt Rheum—Cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla. Only those who have suffered from salt rheum in its worst form know the agonies exacted by this disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla has had great success in curing salt rheum, and all affections of the blood.

I owe the gratitude to Hood's Sarsaparilla that one would to his rescuer from a life of suffering. I was formerly tormented with salt rheum, and had to leave off work altogether. My face, about the eyes, would be swollen and scabbed, my hands and feet were so sore that I could not hold a pen. One physician called it type Poison and gave me medicine accord.

But salt rheum cannot be cured in that way. Finally I bought a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla. It helped me so much that I took two more bottles, and was entirely cured. I have not had salt rheum since. I also used Hood's Olive Ointment on the places affected. It stops the burning and itching sensation immediately. I will recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla not only for salt rheum, but for humors, Loss of Appetite and that "all-gone" feeling so often experienced.
