Longs for Oregon.

The following is an extract from a letter written by Mr. Daniel Gohn, from Johnstown Pa., under date of July 13, 1890 to F. J. Strayer of this city:

"If I was back again in Oregon, I would stay. People don't see the difference in the countries until they come back. It costs more for living here than it does in Oregon. Rents are higher here; and most things in living are higher. There will be no fruit here. It makes my mouth water when I think of the nice fruit in Oregon. Please send me the name of some good wholesale house that deals in fruits."

Mr. Gohn is one of a party that came with me over one year ago. I have already received several letters from parties lately returned east, and they do not paint things there in roseate colors, but sigh, instead, for the "land of big red apples."

For about a year, I have made it a rule when people spoke again of Oregon and wished themselves east to tell them that they would better return east in order to be satisfied, and learn to appreciate Oregon more nearly at its proper value. Still "westward the tide of empire rolls."

Putting Children to Bed.

The mother who puts the timid child to bed, and takes away the light, and goes down stairs, and leaves him to his conjuring, careless and indifferent and disbelieving, or bent on overcoming the mischief forcibly, is destroying something that one would think of small worth to her—not only his nervous fiber, but his love of herself; and the day will come when fate will have its revenge on her in his own indifference to her, and she will recognize it, even if he behave in all outward respects like a dutiful son. It is her part to examine the matter, to reason with the child, to comfort him, to see how far it is possible with him to subdue the fear. If she cannot stay with him herself, she can at least leave the door open so that he may hear the cheerful down-stairs voices, the hum of life, not to be shut into his tomb, as the unformulated thought of his desperate little mind makes it; she can leave a lamp on the hearth, and so let there be some light to dispel his fancies and to keep back the dark and its unshaped visions. She may regard it as trifling, but to him it is tremendous: and if she is wise either in mother love or human kindness she will not let the imaginative and sensitive child suffer more than it must, remembering that that temperament, if it has more to enjoy through life than others, has also much, much more to suffer.

When a few nights have failed to bring calm to the little being out of the experience, and the last going to bed alone is as bad as the first, and all threats have only made the matter worse, and all reasoning has produced no good result; when be has tried to conquer, and the effort has left him trembling as violently as if he has an ague—then it is something not to be overcome by harsh or rough or peremptory measures, and the mother should see to it that this child has some active physical exercise just before going to bed that will make his little body glad of rest, and she would best lie down beside him, or find some work that she can do upstairs till he falls asleep, in order to afford him the comfort of companionship and the sense of her embracing love, and soothe his irritable nerves to repose instead of rousing them to action. These nerves would never have been irritable if she had not insisted on her own way too long in the beginning, if she had given them no chance to get on fire, and then go on exciting themselves. If she had put the child to bed alone from the very outset of his career, so that it was the natural order of things to him, and he had had the habit established of quiet sleep and absence of fear from the first, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred there would never have been any trouble of the sort. But if through any idiosyncrasy of the child, or any remissness of her own, the fear has come upon him, she will never in all the years remaining have greater love outpoured upon her than that child will give her who sees her hovering over his pillow, moving about his room, or feels her pressure on the bed beside him till the drowsy warmth steals over and wraps senses and imagination and all together, and lets her off again to the duties that are less imperative than care of that child's nerves, to the pleasures that are less pleasant than the love he gives her in return.—Harper's Bazar.

To Tame a Bird.

No creature is more jealous or sensative than a bird, says Olive Thorne Miller. It is easy, however, to win the heart of almost any bird, and without starving him or making him think he has mastered you. Simply talk to him a good deal. Place his cage near you on your desk or work-table, and retain his choicest dainty to give to him with your own fingers. Let him know that he can never have that particular thing unless he takes it from you, and he will soon learn, if you are patient, and do not disconcert him by fixing your eyes upon him. After this he will more readily take it from your lips; then when you let him out of his cage, after the first excitement is over, he will come to you if you have a call you have accustomed him to, and accept the dainty from you while free. As soon as he becomes really convinced that you will not hurt him, or try to catch him or interfere in any way with his liberty, he will give way to his boundless curiosity about you; he will pull your hair, peck at your eyes, and give you as much of his company as you desire.

A Royal Portrait.

Professor Angeli has finished a portrait of the German empress, in which her majesty is represented seated on a terrace, dressed in a soft gray silk gown, trimmed with embroidery of the same hue. Crossed over the breast is the orange colored scarf of the order of the Black Eagle. The empress wears strings of pearls wound round her neck and wrists, and a handsome diadem in her hair; in her hands, which are folded, she carries a fan of gray ostrich feathers, the color of which harmonizes with the rest of the picture.

A Cure for Sick Headache.

This distressing complaint is due to an inactive or sluggish liver or constipated bowels which deranges the stomach and disturbs the nervous system causing dizziness and an oppressive dull pain in the head, often so severe as to prevent any rest or sleep. One of Dr. Gunn's Improved Liver Pills will release you of all the pain and misery and a few more doses will correct the liver and stomach and regulate the bowels. While these pills are small, easily taken, and mild and gentle in their action there is no medicine sound that will so effectually cure sick headache. 25 cents a box. Sold by Smith & Steiner.
