"Her grace of motion, and of look, the smooth
And swimming majesty of step and tread,
The Symmetry of form and feature, set
The soul afloat, even like delicious airs
Of flute and harp."

For her matchless look of grace and motion, this regal beauty was indebted to perfect health, restored by the use of that unequaled, invigorating tonic and nervine, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, which set in healthy action every function and gave purity and richness to the blood.

"Favorite Prescription" is a positive cure for the most complicated and obstinate cases of leucorrhea, excessive flowing, painful menstruation, unnatural suppressions, prolapsus, or falling of the womb, weak back, "female weakness," anteversion, retroversion, bearing-down sensations, chronic congestion, inflammation and ulceration of the womb. It is guaranteed to give satisfaction in every case, or money refunded.

OUR STORY.

[The CAPITAL JOURNAL will contain regularly a story, completed in one or two numbers.]

HORSESHOE LUCK.

"Am I too old to think of a second marriage?" said Mrs. Blythe, looking wistfully into the glistening sheet of mirror that extended to the other side of the room into an indefinite perspective of onyx tables, stands of ferns, Japanese screens and India hangings. "Six-and-thirty—and why should one be compelled to give up all the sweetness of life at six-and-thirty? I'm sure I don't look a day over thirty; and Algy Vane must be that at least!"

Mrs. Blythe was a very pretty woman—not the bud, but the full blown rose—a plump, dimpled, peachy-cheeked matron, who knew exactly how to make the most of all her middle-aged advantages.

She had married Maj. Mortlake Blythe at 17, and he had left her a widow at 27.

"I shall never be such a fool as to marry again!" said Mrs. Blythe.

For the major had by no means been perfection. He had left her just enough, by dint of strict economy, to live upon, especially as her only child had been taken to "bring up" by a quiet Quaker couple, the major's relatives. And until now Mrs. Blythe had adhered resolutely to her decision.

But Algernon Vane was a royally handsome fellow, and the pretty widow was but human, and she had scribbled "Rosamond Vane," "Mrs. Algernon Vane," over and over again in her blotting book, and she had treasured up a flower he had worn in his button-hole, and she had corresponded with him during the winter he had spent in Bermuda, writing sprightly and amusing letters, with a semi-tone of seriousness underlying all their sparkling gossip.

"He likes me a little now," said the widow "and I'm determined he shall like me a good deal more. I'm tired of this solitary life; I'm tired of counting every penny half a dozen times before I spend it. Algy is independently rich, and he is my beau ideal of a man. With him I do believe I could be quite, quite happy. He don't know about Lydia; but, of course that would be no objection. Uncle Joshua and Aunt Rebecca will keep her. Dear me, dear me! she must be growing to be a big girl now," and Mrs. Blythe shuddered at the idea.

At this moment the door flew open, and in burst a tall, gaunt, dishevelled young girl, some half a head taller than Mrs. Blythe herself, with the white-capped maid following helplessly behind.

"Please ma'am," said the maid, "she wouldn't wait for me to take her card up."

"Mamma, I'm Lydia," cried the breathless apparition. "Little Liddy, mamma—don't you remember? Tell that hateful girl to go away. A card indeed? Am I to send up cards to my own mother?"

Mrs. Blythe stood appalled, in the soft yellow light streaming through the China-silk curtains. This fair-haired, sun burned young giantess, with the peony cheeks and the big blue eyes, the ill-fitting gloves and faded cambric gown—could it be possible that this was the "little Liddy" of ten years ago? Oh! if Mr. Vane should see her.

The girl looked around like one who views the enchantment of a fairy palace.

"Oh mamma, now pretty you are!" said she, "and what a lovely room! Are you glad to see me, mamma darling?"

"My dearest child," gasped the widow, "what has brought you here?"

"Lydia clasped her hands; her countenance fell.

"Mamma," said she, I'm the most miserable creature in the world—and I want $100."

"Lydia! A hundred dollars!"

"And you must let me have it!" vehemently went on Lydia. "I've killed Uncle Joshua's prize colt! That is, I di In't exactly do it myself; but I was riding 'Pretty Jane' round the meadow, just for practice, and I forgot and left the bars down and the colt got out on the railroad track, and the train came along, and—oh! I never can look Uncle Joshua in the face again, unless I have that $100 to pay him!

"I shall be able to earn plenty for myself before long, mamma," she added, breathlessly, "for I can ride better than the woman in pink tarleton and spangles who jumped through the hoops at the circus. When the old Gypsy told my fortune last year at the county fair, she said a horseshoe would bring me luck some day; and I knew of course, what she meant. So I've been practicing riding ever since, whenever I could get away from Aunt Beck and Uncle Joshua, and —"

"Mrs. Dappleton Ames is in the drawing-room, ma'am," said the white-capped maid, appearing with an oxidized silver card-receiver in her hand.

And Mrs. Blythe checked her daughter's confidences at once.

"Lydia," cried she "I'm surprised at you! A great girl like you scuffling and romping around the country! Go back to Shady Plains by the very next train, and try to behave more like a lady. Why, you must be 14 at least!"

"Seventeen, mamma," confessed the culprit. "But aren't you going to give me the $100?"

"I have not got 100 cents!" impatiently cried Mrs. Blythe. "And if I had, I wouldn't give it to you, you naughty, ill-behaved, romping—yes, Matilda, tell Mrs Dappleton Ames that I shall be down directly, and bring some tea and buns for—for Miss Blythe before the next train goes."

But when Mrs. Dappleton Ames had finished her call, and Mrs. Blythe come back, the bird had flown. Lydia, deeply wounded and resentful, had promptly returned to Shady Plains.

"That old Gypsy must have been a humbug, after all," thought the dispairing girl. "Oh, what shall I say to Uncle Joshua? Why was mamma so cold and cruel to me? Oh, dear, I am very, very unhappy!"

"Shady Plains!" shouted the conductor.

And as Lydia crept sorrowfully out of the train, something bright, like a fallen drop of dew, scintillated on the floor at her feet. She stooped to pick it up. It was a diamond scarf-pin in the shape of a horseshoe.

"Squire Cahart's company must have dropped it," said Lydia to herself. "Oh how it sparkles! If it were only mine! For I'm sure it must be worth more than $100.

She glanced furtively at a tall, broad-shouldered young fellow who had been seated in the train a few seats beyond her.

"He never looked around," thought Lydia. "I'm glad of it, for he must have known I had been crying. But I must give this back to him.

With a light, swift step, she hastened to overtake Squire Cahart's city guest.

Please, is this yours?" said she, holding up the glittering half-circle. "I found it on the floor close to where you were sitting."

He started and raised his hat.

"It is Mr. Wooton's neice, isn't it?" said he—"Miss Lydia? Yes it's mine, and I'm a thousand times obliged to you. I must have fastened it very carelessly. And I value it very highly, too; it was a gift from my father."

"Is it worth a great deal of money?" asked Lydia, timidly lifting her sea-blue eyes to his face.

"About $100, I suppose."

"I wish it was mine," said Lydia, with a long sigh, as if she were thinking aloud.

"Yours? Why, it isn't a lady's ornament."

"Oh, not the pin," said Lydia, "but the money—the hundred dollars. Good-bye! Here is the carraige waiting from Cahart Court."

"Will you let me drive you as far as Wooten farm?" asked the stranger courteously.

And tired Lydia willingly acceded.

The upshot of it was when she entered her uncle's presence she gave him a bank bill representing the price of the "prize colt."

"Where did thee get this money, child?" solemnly asked Uncle Joshua.

"I—I borrowed it," confessed Lydia. "Don't ask me any more questions, uncle. I'll pay it back if I have to pick blackberries at four cents a quart all summer."

"I hope thee will give up this boydenish business of scampering about on horseback, Lydia, after this," severely spoke up Aunt Rebecca.

"But, aunt, the fortune-teller told me that my fortune would one day be made by a—"

Lydia stopped abruptly as she remembered how the diamond horseshoe had glittered on the floor at her feet that day. Her color rose, her heart beat.

"Thee must remember, Lydia," admonished Aunt Rebecca, "that all diviners and fortune-tellers are snares of Satan."

"Yes, Aunt Rebecca," murmured the girl.

But from that day an inscrutable change came over the character of her life.

The pleasant summer sunshine had faded out of the land. The Saratoga hotels were closed, gay Newport was deserted.

And Mrs. Blythe, sitting in the yellow light of her jonquil silk curtains, was smiling over a card which Matilda had just brought in.

"Dear Algy!" she murmured. "I knew he would come."

She glided into the white-and-gold drawing-room, all gracious cordiality.

"You recreant cavalier!" she smiled. "I've half a mind to scold you, and yet—"

"Do I deserve that title?" Mr. Vane asked. "For you are the first person to whom I have told the great happiness of my life. Oh, I see you don't understand me. Come from behind the draperies, Lydia, and help me to explain."

And Lydia, blue-eyed and fair-tressed, came.

"We are married, mamma," said Lydia, "Algy and I. And we sail for Europe in the Commandra, at noon. Won't you kiss me, mamma, and wish me joy?"

Mrs. Blythe kissed Lydia—and Algy, too—and wished them joy.

But it was the severest ordeal to which she ever had been put. A mother-in-law instead of a bride. This was hardly what she had looked forward to.

But even in that trying moment she noticed the glittering pin which fastened Lydia's lace bonnet-strings—a quaint device of tiny diamonds—and remembering what the girl had once said about a fortune-teller and a horseshoe.

"Mamma didn't look quite pleased, Algy," said the bride, when they were back in the carriage, driving to the steamer's wharf. "Do you suppose she is vexed because we didn't take her into our confidence?"

"I dare say," remarked Mr. Vane, "that no mother likes to lose her child so suddenly. Least of all, darling, so sweet a treasure as you."

And neither of the two suspected what a poisoned dagger was that day rankling in the breast of Mrs. Rosamond Blythe.—[Helen Forrest Graves in Philadelphia Saturday Night.

1000 Families to Settle in the Town of Aumsville.

Aumsville is located in Marion county, Oregon, 14 miles south-east of Salem, in the midst of a rich grain, fruit and stock country. The country tributary to Aumsville produces 400,000 bushels of grain yearly, 200,000 bushels of fruit and vegetables, and supports thousands of head of stock. Among its other advantages Aumsville has three miles of valuable water power, a large fertilizer rock quarry on what is known as the Butler place, one mile west of town. It has good shipping facilities, having one railroad and will soon have two more. It has a good 100-barrel roller process flour mill, several good stores, blacksmith shops and fine homes, all in a prosperous condition, a good opening for a woolen mill, fruit dryer and cannery, a tannery and large boot and shoe factory, a large cheese factory. Any man or company starting such an enterprise here could easily obtain milk of 1000 cows.

To anyone who will start a factory of ony kind in Aumsville, the people will give every encouragement in their power.

There is also a good opening here for a weekly newspaper.

Parties looking for a new home or business location should not fail to see Aumsville. Prices of property are reasonable, and now is the time to locate, for in five years there is bound to be a city here of 10,000 inhabitants. 6:20-6w
