ANGER TO THE SOUTH.

The solid south is in danger. That means the solid democratic party. There is likelihood that the people of the south may have more than one political organization from which to select their public servants. The political monopoly of rebellious bourbonism is in imminent risk of destruction in South Carolina. The democratic race oligarchy in that state must hereafter take its chances or its merits as an organization.

One Tillman is stumping that state as the candidate of the Farmers' Alliance. He attacks that southern idol, the democratic party, on state issues. He assails the mismanagement of state affairs, the Railroad Commission, the Board of Agriculture. The farmers are standing by Farmer Tillman. They rally to his meetings and resist all attempts at disturbing his speeches. The Southrons see danger in the air. The same breed of office-holders who keep the negro from voting by appealing to race prejudices, try to keep people from voting for Tillman by asserting that he is not a gentleman and that his followers are not persons of a very fine strain of blood and breeding. The majors and colonels object to a common farmer for governor.

Death alone can keep Tillman from putting the anti-farmer wing of democracy out of the saddle. And so death is talked of. There is almost two months of the campaign yet and unless something is done Farmer Tillman will sweep the state and kid-glove politicians for revenue must stand aside.

THE OREGON CENSUS.

The Oregonian has compiled some interesting statistics about the Oregon census. In 1880 the state had 174,768. The vote the same month was 37,769, or 4.63-100th inhabitants to each voter. The vote in June 1890 was 73,400. At same ratio of population to voters Oregon now has over 500,000.

Last November Washington cast 58,443 and allowing all possible increase in that state since that time, it is hardly probable that it would have cast in June the vote Oregon did. The Oregonian predicts that Oregon's enumeration will fall behind Washington's.

The Oregon state census of 1885 showed a gain of 74,444 in five years. It is certain Oregon gained more in population in the five years just past, than in the five preceding. The same gain would give Oregon 325,000 people. It is perfectly plain that large precincts of mountainous regions cannot be properly enumerated in the time allowed and for the compensation given. Still it is not plain why Oregon should suffer more from this fact than Washington, unless it be that her enumerators were less enterprising.

"Recently on a run between Buffalo and Cleveland on the Lake Shore road," said a dining car conductor, "I had as guests Mr. and Mrs. R. G. Ingersoll. At dinner an amusing incident occurred. Mr. Ingersoll and his wife were seated at a table by themselves, when three traveling men came in and seated themselves just back of them. None seemed to recognize the colonel at first, but suddenly one of the party sighted him, and, hastily motioning me to him, ordered a quart of champagne to be sent to Mr. Ingersoll's table with his compliments. It was quite evident that he had no personal acquaintance with the colonel, but merely wanted to open the way to one. I got the wine ready and carried out my instructions regarding it, when Mr. Ingersoll, without a glance at the donor, promptly and politely declined it, and I, of course, so reported to Mr. Smartly. At the conclusion of the meal, as Mr. Ingersoll rose to leave the car, the drummer ventured the hope that he had not offended by his act, when the colonel, with a smile, said: 'Oh, no; but the fact is my physician has forbidden me the use of wines and liquors,' and he bowed and passed on."

A Tried Remedy for Sufferers

Those who suffer from disorder or laxity of the liver will never get the upper hand of the unruly organ so long as they use such irritating remedies as blue pills, calomel and podophyllin. But from the tried and popular medicine, Hostetter's stomach Bitters, they may expect relief with a certainty of obtaining it. The influence of the liver upon the great bilious organs is direct, powerful and speedy. The relief afforded is not spasmodic, but complete and permanent. The salubrity of the skin, the perfect appearance of the tongue, the freedom from headache, the freedom from the rheumatic complaint, are entirely and promptly removed by a course of this excellent medicine. In behalf of which testimony is constantly emanating from every quarter, and from all classes of society.

WAKEMAN'S WANDERINGS.

Afoot in Scotland—At the Shrine of Robert Burns—Interesting Memories.

DUMFRIES, Scotland, July 10, 1890.

Border wars and border minstrelsy have given the whole south of Scotland a heritage of undying interest and enthusiasm. Coming upon it with eyes looking out of the depths of history and sentiment, every object in nature marshals a host of armored specters from the crowded cloister of a romantic and immortal past. But there is another and an immortal presence here. As the husbandry of peace heals the scars of bloody battle, as the very flowers of the field in precious compensation thickest grow where carnage and fury leave their deepest stains, there came to this war-torn region a lusty soul so simple and rugged, sweet and grand, tender and majestic, weak and mighty, that, throughout the weird, wild land in which it blossomed, nature seems to pause in endless shine and bloom. Out of the stain and scar, out of intolerance and bigotry, out of ignorance and serfdom, out of helotry and hindship, came one rustic serf whose humble ploughshare turned beneath the furrow of his brief toil all the hatred, superstition, intolerance of a thousand warring years. One Scottish southland peasant-voice not only fused into illimitable tenderness all Scotland's stern and granite soul, but gave imperishable songs to the universal human heart.

To all the people of Scotland so dear has the memory of this man become, that three of the southwestern shires of the kingdom—Ayrshire in which the peasant-poet was born, Kircudbrightshire, where he wandered and sang, and Dumfriesshire, where he lived, loved, sang and died—are known only as "Burns' Land." However winsome are the memories of his early life beside the Doon in Ayr; however stamped by the wondrous coinage of his genius, which like some magic alchemy transformed all things Burns touched, or named, or knew, to gold, the bres and burns of Kircudbright may be to my fancy fair Dumfriesshire may be to my fancy fair Dumfriesshire was the imperial palace of his world-wide realm; and this gray old town of Dumfries itself his very throne. Here flows the wimpling Nith, from its sources in the Lead and Lowther hills, down past the little farm of Ellisland, where with his faithful wife Jean he wrought those brief and happiest days of his life. Here still stands the house on Bank street, formerly the "Wee Vennel," the three little upper rooms of which were his first "city" home. The old tavern where he roystered and sang, is just as he left it. His last earthly habitation was the same humble cottage you now find along side the "Rugged School" in Burns street, known as Mill street in the olden days. And in the stately mausoleum beneath the shadows of ancient St. Michaels' kirk, surrounded by the graves and monuments of those who for 800 years went before him in the infinite mystery, he lies asleep, true and loyal Jean still near him, and all their bairns beside them in the wakeless rest.

You or I pilgriming here to the shrine of Burns will first involuntarily recall the principal incidents in his career previous to his identification with the old border city of Dumfries. This can be best told, partially in the language of others. In the period between May, 1786, at the age of 27 years, and the end of the year 1791, when he came from the Ellisland farm to the three rooms in the "Wee Vennel" in Dumfries, a period of but four and one-half years, more personal hope and disappointment, joy and suffering, anguish from impulsive wrong-doing and heaven of the purest domestic bliss, temptation and victory, agonized despair and triumph, had been crowded into the poet's experience, than fall to the lot of most great men in their entire lives. In this brief time, first he was disowned and deserted by Jean Armour, through the bitter and ever unreconciling opposition of her father. He was then betrothed to "Highland Mary" Campbell, the heroine of his immortal ode "To Mary in Heaven," who shortly died of malignant fever at Greenock, and whose grave in the kirk-yard of the Old or West church, in that city, a monument was placed bearing the inscription,

OVER THE GRAVE OF HIGHLAND MARY.

My Mary, dear departed shade,
Where is thy place of blissful rest?
About 100 of his best characteristic poems were already written, and the now priceless first edition of the same had been issued from the rural press of Kilmarnock, in the county of Dumfries. Twin children had been born to him out of wedlock by Jean Armour, one of whom, Robert, in after years a man of rare character and worth, survived the poet 55 years, his decease occurring at Dumfries in 1847, and his body being interred in the Burns vault. Mary Campbell died and was buried at Greenock. Burns' local fame having attracted the attention of the literary coterie at Edinburgh, he was invited to that city where he was "affiliated" at the famous lodge of Free-Masons (which still meets in the veritable room then used) and subsequently "inaugurated" as its poet laureate, the latter event being the subject of a celebrated painting; while he was made the literary lion of the day, as new and enlarged editions of his poems appeared. He then made a tour of the border counties of England and Scotland, and, untarnished by fame, returned to Mauchline, the old home-spot in Ayr, drawn there by his true love for his Jean, who reposed her renunciation, and with whom the former intimacy was renewed. The tour of the North was his true love for his Jean, who reposed her renunciation, and with whom the former intimacy was renewed. The tour of the North was his true love for his Jean, who reposed her renunciation, and with whom the former intimacy was renewed.

There are several of these reprints, differing in minor particulars, but, don't be duped, the body of each is a literal copy of the 1847 edition.

WHAT THE PAPERS SAY OF IT.
The New York Times says:
"Only those who are ignorant of the great advances that have been made in dictionary-making are likely to buy this reprint at any price."
The American Bookstore of New York says:
"The etymologies are utterly misleading, and the 1847 was issued. Comparative Philology was in its cradle. The definitions are imperfect, requiring condensation, rearrangement and additions. The vocabulary is defective, consisting of the commonest words of to-day, especially scientific terms, for which a dictionary is most often consulted, being entirely absent. In not one of these three prime requisites of a dictionary is the Webster reprint a trustworthy guide, or rather it is a misleading one."

This 'reprint' is not intended for intelligent men. It is made especially to be foisted by all the arts of the book canvasser on the credulous, who, from a knowledge of what developments lexicography has undergone during the last forty-two years, this is the crudest feature of this money-making enterprise.

The Buffalo Christian Advocate says: "Don't be duped. Thousands are, or are likely to be, by the flashy, fraudulent advertisements of 'The Original Webster's Unabridged Dictionary,' which is offered for three or four dollars, &c. &c. If any of our readers wish to invest in a purchase which they will be likely afterward to regret, they will do so after being duly notified."

The Journal of Education, Boston, says: "Teachers cannot be too careful not to be imposed on, since the very things which make a dictionary valuable in school are wanting in this old-time reprint. Any high-school dictionary which can be purchased for a dollar and fifty cents is worth more for school use than this."

Many other prominent journals speak in similar terms, and legitimate publishers write us in strong condemnation of this attempt to foist an obsolete book on the public.

The latest and the best, which bears our imprint on the title page, has over 2000 pages, with illustrations on almost every page.

WEBSTER

ANCIENT AND MODERN
DON'T BE DUPED.

A so-called "Webster's Unabridged Dictionary" is being offered to the public at a very low price. The body of the book, from A to Z, is a cheap reprint, page for page, of the edition of 1847, which was in its day a valuable book, but in the progress of language for over forty years, has been completely superseded. It is now reproduced, broken type, errors and all, by a photographic process, is printed on cheap paper and flimsily bound. It is advertised to be the substantial equivalent of "an eight to twelve dollar book," while in fact it is a literal copy of a book which in its day was retailed for about $5.00, and that book was much superior in paper, print, and binding to this imitation, and was then the best Dictionary of the time instead of an antiquated one. A brief comparison, page for page, between the reprint and the latest and enlarged edition will show the great superiority of the latter. No honorable dealer will allow the buyer of such to suppose that he is getting the Webster which to-day is accepted as the standard and the best.

There are several of these reprints, differing in minor particulars, but, don't be duped, the body of each is a literal copy of the 1847 edition.
