HE MARCHED WITH SHERMAN, trudged all the way on foot, over mountain and through morass, carrying knapsack and gun, slept on brush heaps to keep out of the mud, fought cold, from the effects of which he suffers to-day, but he would never recover. Lingering with slow consumption, for many years he saw Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery advertised in a country newspaper, got it determined to try it. A few bottles worked a change; six months continued, a cure was effected. Always too independent to ask his country for a pension, he says he needs none. He helped save his country, he saved himself! Consumption is Lung-scrofula. For scrofula, in all its myriad forms, the "Discovery" is an unequaled remedy. It cleanses the system of all blood-taints from whatever cause arising, and cures all Skin and Scalp Diseases, Eczema, Tetter, Ulcers, Boils, Carbuncles, and kindred affections. It is guaranteed to benefit or cure in all diseases for which it is recommended, or money paid for it will be refunded. Sold by druggists.

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

New England's Metropolis Seen With Western Eyes—Sights and Delights Recorded by the Wife of a Former Oregonian.

Special Correspondent to the Journal.

BOSTON, Mass., Oct. 1.

If strangers from afar could always approach Boston by her great waterway, view the harbor set with many islands and see the hills of the city as their vessel approaches, and then clearly distinguish Beacon Hill with its magnificent golden dome, then surely they must say appreciative things.

When once fairly landed a Westerner sees many odd things to be pondered long and seriously before he is half way sure of his bearings. During the G. A. R. encampment the many strangers had queer encounters with crooked streets, and the divers and sundry names of one street. Some one said to a Boston friend that they could not account for Summer street becoming Winter street as soon as it crossed Washington street. Now Washington street is not so wide as might be, and is an exceedingly crowded thoroughfare. "Well," said the Bostonian, "perhaps it is because you must spring across Washington street lest you fall between."

After one comes to know Boston a little the city is all the more fascinating for its narrow streets odd byways, and incongruous little triangles called Squares, though these last may well puzzle a newcomer fresh from the rectangularities of Western cities.

There are many ways in which it is a favored city, and I think especially so in her money. They are intellectual and cultured in the broad sense, (there are exceptions)—and they are coming into the front rank in thought and work, against odds, that in the newer conditions of the West, are not known.

The Equal Suffragists have had a great work of undoing before it was possible to look upon a convention of Independent Women Voters which was held in the Meionian recently.

Straws are significant in the wind; it is possible to buy spring-heel boots in ladies' sizes, made with broad soles, and uppers cut like a man's shoe in all the leading shoe houses, and to the credit of the sex be it said that these sensible boots are growing wonderfully popular.

Boston doesn't set out to be fashionable but she knows how to be comfortable.

There are many delightful outlings to be taken before one has seen all they wish of Bunker Hill, the navy yard, Cambridge and her classic shades, Mt. Auburn with its famous names on dozens of monumental stones, notable among these is the block of Swiss quartz in its rough form that marks the grave of Agassiz.

He is especially fortunate, who is permitted a peep into the old Cragie House, Cambridge, so long occupied by Longfellow, where is to be seen his study as the poet used it, with the chair, presented by the school children, made from the "spreading chestnut tree;" and happiest of all, if the housekeeper relents at his story of coming from California, and takes him into the library where he may stand before the ancient fireplace where Washington sat in his councils of war.

There has been some talk of cutting away Dorchester Heights, in what is now South Boston, to the level of the street, but so long as one patriotic pulse throbs faster to stand where Washington made his fortification of bales of hay, hauled on ox wagons across the frozen salt marshes, and planted guns to command the city when he had not three rounds of amunition amongst his forces, let us hope that the Heights may overlook the city as of yore.

Old South Church, and Old North must also be visited, and the life blood runs chill in the veins of any American, who does not long to stand in Faneuil Hall.

A walk through the common in the evening, a long pause on the bridge over the Charles River, and and we say to our heart the poem:—

"And forever and forever—
As long as the river flows,
As long as the heart has sorrows,
As long as life has woes—
The moon in broken reflection
In the waters shall appear
As the symbol of love in Heaven
And its wavering image here."

And the bridge becomes a span of another bridge that leads out to nobler and grander living.

J. T. A. B.

A GREAT SPEECH.

The greatest speech of the year was made by Isaac T. Montgomery, a negro, in the Mississippi Constitutional, convention recently in session, to which he was the only negro delegate.

With a deliberateness of utterance, which indicates earnest thought and deep conviction, Mr. Montgomery addressed the convention in support of the proposal to establish an impartial educational test for voters. He declared that before his election he had told his constituents what his attitude on this point would be, and the fact that they elected him with that knowledge makes his utterance theirs and his offer of the olive branch their act.

"My mission here," he said, "is to bridge a chasm that has been widening and deepening for a generation, to divert the maelstrom that threatens destruction to you and yours while it promises no enduring prosperity to me and mine." The existence of that chasm be rightly attributed to the interposition of an alien influence at a time when the one race felt outraged and affronted by the equality of the other before the law, and the other in alarm sought any guidance that promised it security in its new-found liberty. "The alien sought and obtained our confidence, but not our affection," he cried. "That would remain with you and yours until the memories and traditions of former generations shall become obliterated and forgotten." After declaring for a constitutional provision requiring that every man, both white and black, be able to read and write before he can vote, he said:

"Mr. President, it is a fearful sacrifice laid upon the burning altar of liberty. Many of these men I know personally; their hearts are as true as steel. Many are soldiers who have stood amid the smoke of battle on bloody fields in defence of the flag which every American proudly hails as the ensign of freedom and his talisman of protection in all civilized lands.

"Mr. President, I wish to say to my people, nay, we have not taken away your high privilege, but only lifted it to a higher plane and exalted the station of the great American birthright.

"I wish to tell them that the sacrifice has been made to restore confidence, the great missing link between the two races; to restore honesty and purity to the ballot-box and to confer the great boon of political liberty upon the commonwealth of Mississippi.

"Mr. President, I wish to be distinctly understood in saying that there are terms upon which I consent to lay the suffrage of 123,000 of my fellow-men at the feet of this convention.

"It is due to us, sir, that there should be some expression on the part of this great body indicating that the price is adequate, that the contract is ratified and accepted, that henceforth the enlightened sentiment of this great state, as voiced from the hustings, from the public press, from the lecture platforms and from the pulpit, shall unite in the determination that the great question shall be truthfully settled upon the enduring basis of Truth, Justice and Equality; that the race problem shall become a thing of the past and cease to vex and alarm the public mind; that the two races shall peaceably travel side by side, each mutually assisting the other to mount higher and higher in the scale of human progress."

In concluding his remarks he made use of these words:

"If we are to adhere to the belief that there exists a Supreme Arbiter of the destiny of nations we must also accept the opinion that by his decree these two races have been brought together on Southern soil; that by his decree their varied relations have been adjusted and by his decree they must march on together for all time so far as the mind of man can foresee. Will not this same guiding power adjust their relations in the future as they march together evolving new and greater triumphs of progressive civilization?

"Mr. Chairman and gentlemen: In conclusion I again propound the great question:

"Is our sacrifice accepted? Shall the question be settled?"

The effect of this speech is said to have been magical. Those who listened to his eloquent words turned away when the dusky orator had finished, with a deep sense of relief and surprised wonder. The crisis of the convention was passed. That which the culture and polish of Mississippi's proudest had tried to effect had been accomplished by this once slave—the exponent of a despised race. He had united the convention. Henceforth there was little debate, except on matters of detail. The convention was with him, and the report and recommendations of the committee were adopted by a large majority.

These are the sentiments, the adoption of which in practical life will gradually do away with the "race prejudice" and ignorance in the South, and elsewhere. It is not only confined to the South, but exists in all parts of the country to a greater or lesser extent. The farther west one goes the less there is of it, because there is greater freedom and less narrowness and ignorance, caused by the narrow and limited association. Less of the restrictions of "society;" less of the tyranny of "rules and regulations," and more of that which lies in the judgment of the individual, and the governing of himself by his own thought and reason.

This negro's speech is like sunshine after a cold and desolate night on an open plain. In contrast with the narrow, pitiful, spiteful and vicious speeches made by his white brothers in the same convention, Mr. Montgomery's speech stands out like a gem in the midst of trash. The speech plainly shows that all mankind, regardless of race, under equal conditions and similar environment, will develop alike and second with equal rapidity toward its highest destiny. Montgomery's speech does much for the "brotherhood of man" and we welcome him into the fold of "true progressionists" even if some people look upon him as "only a negro." "He's a man for a' that."—Pendleton East Oregonian (Dem.).

Ordinance No. 196.

An ordinance bill providing for the protection of public sewers, the manner of making connection therewith, and for making a record of such connections.

Be it ordained by the common council of the city of Salem.

SECTION 1.—It shall be unlawful for any person or persons to obstruct or in any manner interfere with any public sewer within the city of Salem, or to make connection therewith without the written permission of the city recorder.

SECTION 2.—Any person desiring such connection, before making the same, shall make application in writing to the recorder for a permit therefor, particularly describing the premises to be drained and the point of juncture with said public sewer.

SECTION 3.—The city recorder is hereby authorized to grant permits for such connections, subject to such restrictions as to the size of material of such connecting pipe, the location of traps and the manner of doing the work, as the recorder and committee on streets and public property may deem necessary. And, when requested by said committee, he shall require from the applicant a bond or other security sufficient in amount to indemnify the city against loss or damage resulting from his carelessness, imperfect work or material, or failure to comply with the terms of the permit or of this ordinance.

SECTION 4.—The person obtaining such permit shall make the connection therein authorized in accordance with its terms, and under the supervision of the street commissioner as provided in ordinance 174; he shall cause the portion of the street or alley disturbed by him to be placed in good condition; and notify the recorder in writing of the completion of the work, that a record may be kept of such connection.

SECTION 5.—The recorder shall make a record, in a suitable book, of all connections heretofore made with the public sewers of the city, and such as may be hereafter made under the provision of this ordinance, showing the location, size and material of the connecting pipe, the point of juncture with the public sewer, and the name of the person or persons to whom the permit was granted together with the time when such connection was made, and shall make such other record relating thereto as said committee may direct.

SECTION 6.—Any person violating any of the provisions of sections 1 or 4 of this ordinance, shall upon conviction thereof before the recorder, be fined in a sum not exceeding fifty dollars. A true copy.

THE WEEKLY CAPITAL JOURNAL

$1.00 Per Year

IS THE

LARGEST, CHEAPEST

And Best

For the Money on the Pacific Coast

It has a large circulation in the towns and among the best farmers of Marion, Polk and Yamhill counties. Aside from this it also has a wide circulation throughout the Eastern states among people who are studying Oregon with a view to coming West. THE JOURNAL makes a specialty of giving accurate information concerning fruit growing and farming products, also the market reports. It is an unexcelled advertising medium for the local trade and real estate interests.
