

SHE MARCHED WITH SHERMAN.
Brought all the way on foot, over mountains and through snows, carrying her gun, except her bedding and a few personal effects, from Fort Verde, Arizona, to Fort Verde, California, where she was received by General Sherman, who advanced in a country brewerian, and he determined to see her home. Always too independent to ask for money for a pension, he now says, "I will be served himself."—San Francisco Call.

put her for ten hours in an office, and insist that she be spared nothing. She shall run errands, dust and sweep to begin with, and, that she may some day be a master, she must learn early to serve."

"And where, pray, did you get all these democratic ideas?" a listener inquired. "We all know you were not raised to believe so."

"What I did not remember from my own childish longing to be 'something really and truly,' my own children called me to recollect. Youth wants real things, and if its desires were not so often thwarted we would not be such a tangled-up lot of men and women."

A lot of thoughtful mothers took the waiting elevator. They had been discussing the problem of the working women as an inferior class, and here was one of their own aristocratic number who dared wish herself and her daughter to be one of them, and then called freedom.

There was one thought suggested in the mother's confession that stayed by me, and that was with regard to the southern women. There was another slavery necessitated through the servitude of the African. The women of the South were kept in a helpless condition because everything had been done for them instead of by them. And the next proclamation to be made for the release of the South must be made by their women themselves. When they declare for self-support and independence, and make it a recognized custom that woman is a working factor instead of a drag and dependent there will be a different state of affairs to be reported concerning our southern sisters. Many have made the beginning and no doubt it will be an established thing in a few years that women will be the energetic element in the South as she is to-day in the North.

There was a romantic story about during the summer of the daughter of an eminent judge who gave up her summer outing to work for a school committee, of no means, who was working in a cloak factory for a living. The girl of wealth worked at the bench all through the heated season, sacrificing herself for her humble friend. Doubtless this philanthropic young lady had learned to pity the needle, or how wretched would have been her helpless sympathy. It is probably rare that a judge's daughter is capable of rendering so practical assistance, else the case would not possess such extraordinary features. Among laboring companions such sacrifices are often made, and sometimes even entail the loss of that which is necessary to the lesser to the lesser. It is virtually so rare in the wealthy that it need be extolled?

There is one building lady in Chicago who above all others shows what a woman can do if she has a mind to. She has made it her duty to assist a busy husband in investing his surplus in real estate. Her woman's knock at knowing a bargain when she sees it comes beautifully into play in buying the lots first of all and afterwards in the construction and material buying. She makes all her building plans herself, utilizing every inch, and passing into service every modern and ancient convenience. When she has things to suit herself it is referred to the architect for approval and adoption. She is well known and feared by the contractors, for her keen eye oversees every stick and nail, every bit of quantity and quality that goes to make up her structure. She mixes all the paint that is used, for she has rare artistic sense. She combines a practical knowledge of many trades with a developed taste for the fine arts and fancying, such as it would be hard to equal by a person trained in these branches by a long apprenticeship. Her houses have long been considered models and imitated, and her advice is sought by many as the soundest, and besides it is always given with an eye to economy without leaving beauty and utility out.

A certain young woman who belongs to the training class of Kindergarten worked during the summer months at the millinery counter in one of the large stores and earned quite a bit toward keeping herself for another year. She had learned enough through exercising her taste on her own hat that she was able to command wages for her natural art. I know also of several girls in the same work a few years ago who put in their summers at the printer's case, setting type that the winter course of lectures might be enjoyed with less pecuniary trouble. They had learned their trades in their country homes and used the knowledge to splendid advantage, and were proud to be among the few girls who were not kept, while in the class, by their parents.

A petition asking that the north end of Cottage street be drained was referred to committee on streets and public property.

The petition of Steeves Bros. and others for permission to make sewer connection on Chemeketa street was granted.

A petition of H. J. Eggers and others for a sidewalk on the west side of block 78 was referred to the committee on streets on roads.

A proposition was presented from J. C. Zoung to put in a system of electric fire alarms, 12 stations, regular, going, etc., at an expense of $500, and the same was referred to the committee on fire and water.

A proposition was read from John Heidecker for computing the wall of the city building on State and Liberty streets and other cement work thereon, $116.00, and was referred to the committee on ways and means.

An ordinance bill was presented and read providing for the conduct of city elections. It is a lengthy document, almost equal to the city charter, and taxed the modest voice of Mr. Conn in reading. After filling in the salary of policemen as at present, $50 per month, the ordinance was by the mayor referred to the committee on ways and means and city attorney.

Regulation of City Elections. Pay of City Officers. Power. Teure. Etc.

The city council of Salem met last evening with Mayor Williams exercising his customary promptness in being ready to call to order on time and before a quorum was ready for business.

At the close of the session, the city council of Salem met last evening with Mayor Williams exercising his customary promptness in being ready to call to order on time and before a quorum was ready for business.

A motion was carried that whenever fire hydrants were to be put in, the same should be done by inviting bids.

Bills against the city were read and referred to the committee on accounts and current expenses, except those of special policemen and a few others, which were ordered paid.

The street commissioner was instructed to have properly repaired the approach on the south side of the covered bridge on South Mill creek.

The special committee to whom was referred the damage to the cement sidewalk in front of Wm. England's property and the Congregational church on Liberty street by reason of a horse cart having run over the same while fresh, reported in favor of paying the parties for and the report was adopted.

On motion a warrant was ordered drawn in favor of Mrs. N. O. Parsons for $5.00 for services of horse in having fire apparatus.

The committee on ways and means were authorized and empowered to have proper repair made on the city building, after which an adjournment was had.
