WOMEN'S ROUND TABLE.

(By Andrea Hefer.) NEW IDEAS IN CLOTH COLORINGS. Beauty of texture has almost reached its limit, if there be one, in the beautiful materials of this winter.

Warm, bright notes are struck in yellows and terra-cottas, autumn-leaf browns, and all the tints, while lighter and more youthful toilettes are flushed with pink, or dyed with oriental art in shades that are neither blue nor green, but an exquisite blending of both.

White is no longer hard or deathly, but holds all the colors of the morning in its transparent meshes, while black has also lost its old significance, and becomes a vehicle of light and beauty.

What can be imagined more graceful, more convenient, or more comfortable than the rough, (yet softer than velvet) wools, in yellow-browns, bronze, or terra-cotta, cut whole, buttoned on the side, and drawn up over the petticoat with a girle or a clasp, a rim of fur outlining neck and open sleeves, the back flowing out from under a monk's hood or a Watteau plaid.

The world is not so fearful of bright colors as of old. Artists in cloth have learned better how to handle and combine them, and men as well as women have discovered how to wear them appropriately. One must grow into a true freedom of carriage, a beautiful countenance, and a love for the beautiful before color is either desired or appropriate.

A free minded, free bodied woman, beautiful in thought and body, is bound to be beautiful and the rainbow itself might be proud to adorn her as a fitting ornament to grace.

We are too ready to say that it has only lately become possible for women to venture alone on these long journeys, for the recently published life of Miss Dorothea Dix reminds us that nearly forty years ago she traveled thousands of miles without escort in this country and in Europe, visiting hospitals even in Constantinople in her zeal for improving the condition of the insane.

Query—How can a woman obtain regular employment on a newspaper or periodical?

It is difficult now to do this. The only way is by trying, and at the best it is precarious. Regular positions are few in number, and have usually been obtained by the evidence of peculiar aptitude in a given direction but they are never secure, and the women holding them usually work hard in other directions as a resource in case they are thrown out.

"Positions" that are worth anything are rarely given for the asking. If they do not seek the individual, there are always dozens waiting for the opportunity.

After learning all you can, there is only one thing to do; begin with such chances as you can get, and work your way up.

HOW TO GET A POSITION. Begin by knowing what you would like to do or be. Do whatever work finds its way into your hands, day by day, never grudging a stroke. If your desire is to become a writer catch every thought that speaks itself to you in your daily duty—from the dish washing up. Be content and know that jewels are being scattered constantly, from every action, for you to pick up.

Pick them up and store them away, perhaps on paper, if you get time, and perhaps not. Watch every opportunity and criticism and find improvement in it. Don't tell anyone with what object you are working not even your diary, but make everyone and your diary besides, serve you for practice.

Write every letter with your design in view, speaking always your highest and best.

One good plan is the study of good writers. Take a beautiful extract and put it into your own words or write your conception of it as though for the public eye.

Study sentence by sentence the peculiar construction of the writings of greatly admired authors, catching of course the deeper thought first and the setting afterward. Seek the truth in every thing, even your practices work, and when you have found it, speak it.

The next thing to do and do thoroughly is to find the names of parties who have something to offer young writers; keep a memorandum of every item that seems feasible—keep a list of names of leading workers in the literary field, watch what they are doing and what newspaperdom is demanding.

Write, write, but don't bore anyone to death with it, and don't neglect any more important work to do it, for your thoroughness as a writer depends greatly upon your general habits and character.

Keep track of all the press association reports, learn about the societies and their active work; they are very anxious to help themselves along by helping others if they but see a grain of promise.
