What the Faculty of the University of California Has to Say.

Your committee have made a very careful examination of the ROYAL BAKING POWDER and are satisfied that it fulfills all the requirements which the public can make of a baking powder. For purity and care in preparation it equals any in the market, and

Our test shows that it has greater leavening power than any other of which we have any knowledge.

Notes on Wheat and Flax.

By H. T. French, at the Experiment Station, Corvallis.

The detail work of sowing and caring for the varieties of wheat recorded in this bulletin, were largely under my supervision; but the work was begun by Prof. E. Grimm, who preceded me as Agriculturist, and who published the results of similar work last season in bulletin No. 4.

OBJECT OF THE WORK.

The object in growing a large number of varieties of wheat, was first, to discover if possible some variety that would be more profitable than the varieties already grown on the farms in this state. Second, to determine the effect of a change of soil and climate upon the character of the product, as shown by a chemical analysis and manner of growth.

In reaching the first object we have some indications which point toward very satisfactory results indeed. Definite conclusions, however, cannot be drawn until the varieties have been grown for several years under like conditions. Many of the varieties tested promise to excel any of the varieties grown in this vicinity. At first, change of soil and climate acts very often as a stimulant, which soon loses its beneficial effects. For this reason we forbear to draw any definite conclusions until further work has been done. We will mention some of the indications which further investigations will either establish or prove to be false.

As regards the improvement of the product the results are very satisfactory so far as the eye can detect. Chemical analysis has not been made as yet, to determine the changes which have taken place in the composition of the product. The work of a single season, and in a few cases that of two seasons, has produced very marked changes in the external character of the product. In no case has the product deteriorated, and in many cases there has been a marked improvement. In case of an imported French wheat, the product, after two years trial, could hardly be classed with the original. The changes are very marked. The grain is much larger and has changed from a dark amber to a light amber. The change is noticeable in several instances. Several very dark colored wheats brought from the eastern states, have become very much lighter in color. This feature is a very interesting one and leads us to the conclusion which has been very well established before, that wheat finds in Oregon most congenial soil and climate.

The yield was not large. Many of the varieties were grown only in small plats, for we were unable to procure the seed in larger quantities. In some instances only 25 kernels were planted. While the yield in no case was large, yet it was very good under the conditions which prevailed.

The ground on which the wheats were grown bore a small crop of fodder corn the season before. This crop was removed and cut for silage, and the ground plowed for the wheats.

The grain was sown too late for last season. The extreme wet and cold weather came on, freezing and thawing the ground over several of the varieties before they came up. The rains beat the ground very smooth, and when the dry weather came it baked the ground as hard as a pavement, thus producing very poor conditions for the growth of the wheat plant.

From the results, and from observations, both in the field and in the plats, we are of the opinion that a too thorough pulverizing of the ground in the fall is a detriment, rather than an advantage, unless the tendency to puddle can be overcome by applying coarse manure or straw. This season we have harrowed into the soil a quantity of coarse manure, and shall watch the results with much interest. No fertilizers were used on the plants.

Some of the varieties have been grown in other states as spring wheats, but here they were all, with but few exceptions, sown in the fall.

The Martin's Amber is one the varieties which indicates good results in this climate and soil. This variety has been one of the best grown in several of the eastern states, having yielded for several years very satisfactory results; and although it is called an amber it is as white as many of the white wheats. It is a flinty white, however.

The Beryl is one of the most promising varieties grown in small plats. This represents a type of white wheat which gives good results both as to yield and quality. The head is large and compact, and the berry is medium in size and plump. The grain does not easily shatter.

There are several amber colored varieties that are good yielders and produce very desirable results; but these are classed in this market as inferior to the white, and rate two or three cents less per bushel. There is a close resemblance in many of the so called varieties. This feature will be made a special study during our future work in this line. No doubt many of the varieties can be classified under one name, and if not under one name under one type at least.

The history of the Willits, Roberts, Bailey, Stewart, Beal and Johnson, will be of much interest. Those varieties appear to be very hardy and vigorous, and indicate good yields. The two originating from hybridizing wheat and rye, are especially hardy; but the amber color is an objection to some extent. If, however, this loss can be made up by additional yield and vigor of growth, then the objections are largely overbalanced. We only had twenty-five kernels of each of these varieties for seed last season. Enough seed was obtained to make a test of the yield this season.

While it will be necessary to test those varieties which indicate good results further and on a larger scale, yet we feel assured that there are several sorts which will give very satisfactory results indeed.

It is our intention at the end of the coming season, to distribute some of the best varieties throughout the state, that they may meet a more extended trial under varied conditions.

FLAX.

The Portland Linseed Oil Works sent a sample of flax seed to the Experiment station, for the purpose of testing its growth in the production of seed.

The seed was sown May 25th, but owing to the extreme dry weather a large portion of it failed to germinate.

The soil was the black upland of the valley, such as would be considered very good for the production of wheat or other grain. No fertilizer was used.

The young plants made a good growth, reaching two feet in height when harvested.

A portion of the plat was carefully measured off, and the plants pulled and placed in small piles to dry. After th roughly drying, the seed was threshed out, giving a yield of nine and one-half bushels per acre. The stand was not as good as it ought to have been, and would have been, had not the weather prevented the germination of the seed.

At one time this crop was an important factor in the agricultural products of portions of the valley. May it not again be successful? We shall test the growth of this plant further during the coming season.

The Pulpit and the Stage.

Rev. F. M. Shrout, Pastor United Brethren Church, Blue Mound Kan., says: "I feel it my duty to tell what wonders Dr. King's New Discovery has done for me. My lungs were badly diseased, and my parishioners thought I could live only a few weeks. I took five bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery and am sound and well, gaining 26 lbs. in weight".

Arthur Love, manager Love's Funny Folks Combination, writes: "After a thorough trial and convincing evidence, I am confident Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, beats 'em all, and cures when everything else fails. The greatest kindness I can do my many thousand friends is to urge them to try it." Free trial bottles at Fry's Drug-store. Regular sizes 50c. and $1.00.

LiVer Complaint—Biliousness.

The chief symptoms of this disease are depression of spirit; foul coated tongue; bad tasting mouth; disagreeable breath; dry skin with blotches and eruptions; sallow complexion and yellow eyes; tired; aching shoulders; dull pain in right side; faintness dizziness and irregular bowels. This complaint in all of its forms can be easily cured by taking Dr. Gunn's Improved Liver Pills as directed; and a lingering spell of sickness will often be prevented by their use. OUTWITTING A GRIZZLY.

A Venerable Traveler Tells How He Burned Up a Fierce Old Bear.

He was a venerable and intelligent man and had been a great traveler, and he kindly undertook to while away an idle hour by telling a New York Evening Sun reporter of the true inwardness of California life in the foot-hills of the sierra.

"I had several very curious adventures down there," he said, "and, by the way, young fellow, if you ever happen to go to that region you had better throw off your patent leathers and your boiled shirt to begin with, and put on corduroys and high cowhide boots. The brush down there has thorns three inches long, barbed like fish-hooks, and you would soon leave behind you that outfit in with more of what is inside of it than would suit you.

"As to your question about grizzlies, I'll tell you my first and rather remarkable experience with one of those varmints. I was a kid, not yet twenty, and new to the region of the sierras, having come from the East but a few months before. On a moonlight night early in April I was gently meandering home on muleback. I was unarmed with the exception of a pocket-knife, for I had foolishly lent my pistol to a friend early in the day. I had almost reached the ranch, having only a short stretch of chaparral to pass. I had heard the settlers amuse respectfully to old Ephraim. They said he was fiercest in the spring, after his winter's siesta. He's always an ugly customer, and after a man has had a wipe or two from his talons there is seldom enough left of that man to tell the tale.

"On this evening I speak of I was dog tired, as I had been riding all day. I had almost fallen asleep on my mule, when—jumping Jehosaphat! how that mule did jump! Standing ahead, as large as life, on the bank of a little brook, was a big grizzly. He grinned at me and growled in a way calculated to agitate the nerves of Ajax, the fellow who defied the lightning, much more those of a tenderfoot, as I was then.

"I had heard enough to know that if I turned tail, that is the mule's tail, I could leave Ephraim behind me, but on the other side of him was home, and I had my share of grit even then. I had heard of the notion entertained by some people that a man can master the most ferocious wild creature by looking him in the eyes and advancing straight upon him. Even a greenhorn would back out of such an experiment with Ephraim, the most ferocious of all wild creatures.

"Suddenly I remembered I had in my pocket a large box filled with friction matches, those made with plenty of brimstone for use in a strong wind. An idea occurred to me, and I patted and encouraged the mule, who trembled so I thought she would drop down under me, and urged her boldly right in the face of old Bruin. When within a few feet I suddenly struck a dozen matches and threw them right into his open jaws. Never was there a more sudden change from defiant and malignant ferocity to the most abject cowardice. The huge brute actually cowered and shook with terror equal to that of the mule herself.

"This was something altogether outside of his experience. I suppose he thought he had struck a prairie fire on muleback. Even the mule saw the situation and gained courage. She advanced and I kept a continuous shower of burning matches. Luckily a rather strong wind blew from me and carried away the fumes. In fact this is what brought the varmint to me, he having winded me. To cut things short, old Eph turned tail and ignominiously fled.

"Now, stranger, I might proceed to relate further how I kept at the heels of that old grizzly and kept setting fire to his fur until he was entirely burned up; but in this skeptical age it may be well to suppress some of the facts of the case, for fear of being doubted."

ENTIRELY REFORMED.

How an Elephant Was Instrumental in Redeeming a Drunkard.

One of the strangest stories of a drunkard's reformation is told in the Philadelphia Times. William H——, a prosperous tradesman of Eastern Pennsylvania, lost his property through unforeseen business troubles, and, leaving his young family, went West to retrieve his fortune; but discouraged by want of success, he took to drink, and finally became a degraded loafer. He drifted eastward again, and was seen in Troy, N. Y., hanging around liquor saloons. He had lost his manhood, and even his very name (having long been ashamed to be called by it), and men knew him as "The Worm of the Still."

Once, soon after the arrival of a circus and menagerie combination to exhibit in the city, the drunkard saw one of the keepers purchase a pailful of whisky for a sick elephant, and sneaked after him to the circus tent, following the impulse of his raging thirst.

The keeper put the bucket of whisky down before "Betsy," the sick elephant, and she drank about half of it. The intelligent brute knew it was medicine, and did not propose to take more of it than she thought she needed. The bucket, still half-full of liquor, was left standing near her, and the keeper's attention was called away for a moment.

Hardly was his back turned when a bloated, red face was poked through under the canvas, and its pair of watery eyes were fastened greedily upon the bucket. Betsy fixed her keen little eyes on the intruder, stopped swaying to and fro, and waited to see what he would do.

He did not notice her. The fascination of the whisky blinded him to every thing else. The bucket was beyond his reach. He drew himself under the tent until he could clutch it. The instant that he did so, Betsy flung her powerful trunk around his waist, and whirled him up in the air.

She did not mean him any harm, but he was tampering with her medicine, and she would not stand that. So he had barely time to give one wild shriek of terror, when she tossed him thirty feet away, where he struck against one of the ponderous wheels of a lion cage, fell to the earth with one leg broken, and three fractured ribs. She did not attempt to follow and hurt him, for she had no malice. He was carried away on a stretcher to the hospital.

The rest of the story is a pathetic romance. The wretched man's recovery was so slow that fifteen weeks passed before he could walk on crutches; but in that long time the thorough hospital treatment had cleansed all the liquor out of him, and he had begun to look something like his former self.

One day, when a party of ladies visited the hospital, distributing flowers and reading matter to the patients, one of them, a handsome but sad-faced young woman, stopped by his chair, and gazed at him as if strangely startled.

"Father," she said, "you don't remember me. I am your daughter Mary."

It was twelve years since she had seen him, but she knew him.

She had him conveyed to her home as soon as possible, where, in time, he was restored to health, found good employment, and began a new life of sobriety and industry, which continued to the last.

His adventure with the elephant, so nearly fatal to him, proved the means of his reformation.

KISSES.

(A la Romeo and Juliet.)

A prominent physician calls the kiss "an elegant disseminator of disease." He says, "fever is spread by it, so are lung diseases." Out upon the gnarled and sapless vagabond! Evidently kisses are not for such as he, and the old fox says the grapes are sour. Let him devote himself to making our women healthy and blooming that kisses may be kisses. This can surely be done by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, which is simply magical in curing diseases peculiar to females. After taking it for a reasonable length of time there will be no more irregularity, backache, bearing-down sensations, nervous prostration, general debility and kindred ailments.

It is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money refunded.
