fact, many of the details must be a subject of long discussion, and a detail of today may be overthrown tomorrow by the discovery of new conditions. The question of settlement with the government on the direct obligations of the Union Pacific company is one which must remain in the balance until negotia. tions can be reopened with congress, but while that feature of Mr. Gould's plan must be, from the necessities of the case, the last to be perfected, the provisions for prior liens and the amalgamation of the debts of the leased lines may be ar ranged and carried out at an earlier date. It is not yet decided whether 4 or 5 per cent shall be the rate on the new consolidated mortgage bonds. The final decision will depend largely on the condition of the money market during the negotiatious that must precede the exchange of underlying investments. Mr. Gould's skill in financiering is so well known, that no doubt is entertained by his friends that the operation he has in hand will suc ceed. It is impossible to figure, however, upon the possible saving of interest rates that might b effected by the successful execution of this project, as it is yet in a some what chaotic state. The importance of the work that Mr. Gould and his otstol. colleagues have taken up, in itbearing on Wall Street affairs, i

Imprisonment, Rescue and the Triumph of Love.

"Please, sir," said old Zeruiah, the ouse-keeper, "there's a man up in the plum-tree! Up in the plum-tree!" repeated Mr.

"And what's he doing up in the Brown. plum-tree! It ain't the time o' year for ripe plums.

"No," said Zeruiah, giving the frying nan that she was cleaning an extra scrap with the knife, "'taint time o' year for plums to be ripe. But it's always time o' year for young men to make fools of themselves, and the third branch of that 'ar plum-tree is on a line with the window of Arabella Arden's room." "Eh?" said Mr. Brown, dropping his newspaper and opening his eyes very wide "As true as you live, sir," said Zeruiah. "But that was precisely what my brother sent her down here for," said Mr. Brown, contracting his bald forehead into innumer-able wrinkles. "To keep her out of Hubert Wynton's way!" "Humph!" said Zeruiah. "The world is wide, but it ain't wide enough to keep two fools apart." "Up in the plum-tree, is he?" said Mr.

"What sort Brown, with a sardonic smile. of a looking fellow is he, Zeruiah?" "Wall," answered the old woman, still holding the frying-pan as Minerva of old might have held her shield, " the leaves is thick, and my sight am't what it once was: but he's got light-colored clothes on, as was never cut in Bean Hollow; and his hat. that lays out on the grass, has got a city maker's name in it."

"Good !" nodded Mr. Brown. "You ought to have been a detective, Ruey. They would give you good wages, I'll bet a big apple. Where's the hat?" brung it in and put it on the hall table," answered Zeruiah. Very well. Go out and chain Casar under the plum tree. Give him a good length of chain, Ruey. Then come back and move all Arabella's things into the west bedroom.
