

WHERE SHRIMPS COME FROM.

They are Caught in the Gulf of Mexico and are Canned in New Orleans.

You can find a good many things in Fulton market that you are not likely to understand unless you know something of the inner secrets of the fish business.

"Shrimps," said the fish dealer, "are caught in the Gulf of Mexico. The season lasts four months, two in the spring and two in the fall, and in that time a tremendous business is done in the way of catching and canning them.

"The shrimps run in large schools down the numerous passes leading into the Gulf of Mexico, where the fisherman catch them with their seines, frequently bringing in at one haul enough to fill one of their boat bows.

"After being taken to the shells the shrimps are put in a vat of salt water, and are cooked by means of steam pipes running through the vats. Then they are put into little gauge bags, each bag just big enough to fit inside the cans used, there being so much phosphorus in the shrimp that unless some precaution is taken the tin would be eaten through by its action.

"After the shrimps are placed in the cans they are hermetically sealed, this being done by machinery. The cans are then put into a large tank, and once again the shrimps are put through a steaming process, this being ten times hotter than before. After this the shrimps are thoroughly cooked, and when the cans cool they are labeled and put in boxes. Next you see them here in Fulton market, ready for the table of any one who has the price."

There are many magnificent private collections of vestments in the vicinity of New York. One of the finest and most artistic is used in the private chapel of Mr. Lindley H. Chapin, of Fifth Avenue.

Dr. Rainsford is the most unique figure in New York as I saw him in Beecher's old pulpit in Plymouth church not long ago. Over six feet in height, his form is straight and he carries himself with the precision of a German drillmaster.

Mr. Kelly's Omnipotent Great Dane. James Black, of Sheephead bay, has a dog known as the Great Dane. He is the property of Banker Kelly's son, of New York, and is kept with Mr. Black's large canine family in the barn adjacent to his house at the bay.

Mr. S. P. Watson, of this city, is a man of peace and of an inventive turn of mind. Whenever he sees his fellows clash over trivialities he gets his thinker to work, and lo! forth comes the remedy. On many occasions Mr. Watson has lost his turn at the barber's rather than engage in dispute, and now he comes out with a device which he has patented, and which will make everything serene hereafter in the parlors of the artist's tonsorial.

Good Form in Carrying Parcels. In London it is not considered "good form" for a gentleman to carry through the streets a parcel, however small or elegantly wrapped. He may carry a parcel if it is not too large and is not wrapped up for a book or a book, but a parcel of a pound of cheese or a dozen red herring. The restriction is a foolish one, a form of class distinction that is inconsistent with the highest civilization, in which every man will be a gentleman if he is thoughtfully considerate of others, whether he is a laborer or rides in a carriage.—Youth's Companion.

Frank—Blanche seems awfully shy. What do you suppose makes her so timid? May—She's probably afraid you're not going to propose.—Munsey's Weekly.

Stallions Fight.

One of the most terrible battles that probably ever took place between ranch stallions occurred near the home ranch of the Little Missouri Horse farm in the spring of 1888, at the time when the several bunches or droves of horses were being driven in from the ranges for an account of stock and for the branding of the young colts. It happened by the mere chance that three droves came in together, with the stallions leading. Naturally the three joined, and at once arose the question of leadership. This could only be settled by a battle, and before the herdsmen could begin to form any plan for separating them, the three stallions were engaged in ferocious battle.

As described by those who saw it, this battle was so savage and so bloody that it seemed certain that at least one of the combatants must be killed. It lasted a little more than twenty minutes, and when the "smoke of battle" drifted away and the fight was done, a big gray Percheron called Napoleon was seen to be the victor, and he it was that, with uplifted head and proud curved tail, led the company of mares and colts to the pastures, while the two defeated ones marched to gather, like whipped curs, dejectedly in the rear.

In this instance, although the fight was an unusually desperate one, and all three horses were badly cut and torn, none of the three suffered more than temporary discomfiture.—Harper's Weekly.

Applications for passes are made on a great variety of grounds. Women who have sick relatives and friends to whom they want to go form a very large class of pass beggars. Chauncey M. Depew sees a large number of this class. His wide celebrity and reputation for geniality makes him the favorite game of impetuous persons hunting for passes.

All railroad presidents endeavor to dodge the applicants for passes, but they only partly succeed. Many applicants, when told that the president is too busy to see them, calmly sit down outside of his office door and wait until he comes out. Sometimes they wait half a day, and then fall to get the desired pass.—New York Times.

Why endure it daily, nightly, we had with each other. I have been troubled by chronic rheumatism. The remedy, boric acid, pure and prompt is a relief. See the evidence in "Baker's Stomach Bitters" which I used. It cured me. It cured me. It cured me.
