HARRISON IN 1892.

HE WILL BE THE CANDIDATE.

John J. Ingalls Sums it all up in His Usual Breezy Fashion—Harrison and Cleveland the Inevitable Nominees—Blaine Isn't In It.

Chicago News: John J. Ingalls, who is just now a guest at the Grand Pacific, has been unbosoming himself to the editor of Truth (New York) on the probabilities of the approaching presidential campaign. As usual, the brilliant and uncompromising western statesman has the courage of his convictions and expresses them in a vernacular full of vim and color. "When the 51st congress adjourned," he says, "the president was at his apogee. He had reached, in his orbit, the farthest possible point from a renomination.

"He was chosen by the convention in 1888 as the least obnoxious among his rivals, because conscience had made cowards of the friends of Blaine. The campaign that ended with his election was cold and torpid. Cleveland's vacant, stolid egotism; his elaborate and unnecessary affronts to the pensioners; his financial and economic vagaries; his insolent indifference to the leaders of his own party, made democratic success impossible and the election of any republican candidate inevitable.

"When this was finally discerned the partisans of the disappointed competitors, exasperated at the consequences of their own timidity and irresolution, began even before the inauguration, by systematic but furtive disparagement, by depreciatory and contemptuous criticism, by flippant and shallow sneers at the ancestry, the personality, the character and the characteristics of Mr. Harrison, to belittle and degrade him before the country, to embarrass his coming administration and to place a second term beyond his reach.

"Reinforcing themselves with the deserters and malcontents who were disappointed in the delirious strife for place, they produced a formidable impression upon the people.

"They were aided in the conspiracy by the unfortunate manner of the president, by his frigid and irresponsive temperament and by some errors of judgment for which he has had made ample expiation.

"Beneath these superficial blemishes was a solid and substantial structure—courage, intelligence, elevated purposes and lofty ideals.

SO "SLOUCH" IS PRACTICAL POLITICS.

"Those who knew Mr. Harrison during his senatorial term were impressed with his sterling qualities. Though not sympathetic, imaginative nor impassioned, his personal honor was unblemished, his intellectual powers well poised, disciplined and vigorous. Lacking that undefined attribute called magnetism, he had staying powers. Like the Missouri river in midsummer, without much speed he displayed a great deal of bottom.

"His moral nature was active, but not offensively so. His home was consecrated and he was not ashamed to believe in God. While classified among those who frequent the cedar walk and the milky way of civil service reform in theory, he was no slouch in the art of practical politics. He had neither intimates, satellites nor parasites, and it is an illustration of his discretion that though his presidential term began two years after his senatorial service ended none of his associates followed him to the white house. Indeed, his most pronounced differences were with some of those with whom he had sat in the senate chamber.

"So confident have his foes been that his career was closed that they have tacitly and openly ignored him in the consideration of the succession without the formality of casting lots for his garments.

BLAINE ISN'T IN IT.

"The Blaine myth has been revived with great energy, and the inspirers of many favorite sons and village idols has grown ruddy with the exertion of fish though the great secretary of state is no more possible than were Clay and Webster, and for the same reason. Popular governments do not receive their supreme honors for their greatest civil leaders. Since Jefferson we have had no civilian president of the first order, and it is not probable that there will be another. The tendency to mediocrity and nonentity accelerates, and will eventually become irresistible.

HARRISON'S GREAT RIVAL 'MONG THE CLOUDS.

"The presidential Immortelles tal tour, just finished, was a distinct movement toward his perigee, and the soothsayers and augurs announce with gravity that it has been one of the most important political pilgrimages of the generation. Evidently it was not a sentimental journey. Geographically it was well laid out on the map. It touched strategic points. Its itinerary was august and imposing and there were no recorded mishaps. The receptions and demonstrations were hearty, spontaneous and cordial. The speeches were a revelation. It is the casual, informal and unpremeditated utterances that try the soul of your orator; balcony speeches, responses to extemporaneous throngs of curious, inquisitive, sometimes hostile and often indifferent spectators at stations, hotels and Pullman platforms at unseasonable hours and amid unpropitious conditions.

"It is not perhaps undue eulogy to say that there was no weak, awkward nor unfortunate expression or phrase in the 140 unpretentious speeches of the president; nothing requiring explanation or apology. This of itself is praise enough; but beside this negative quality they displayed diversity, rhetorical excellence, propriety, modesty, patriotism, familiarity with local conditions, humor, good temper and exalted conceptions of our national destiny.

"Contrasted with the igneous platitudes of his encyclopediacal predecessor, they glitter and coruscate like the stars in heaven.

A DESPERATE BATTLE, BUT NOT HOPELESS.

"No student of political dynamics has ever seriously doubted Harrison's renomination, and from this time forward there will be less scoffing. Anything else would be illogical. It would be a confession that the work of a republican congress was a failure, that protection was a fake and that the accusations of parliamentary tyranny and legislative extravagance were true. The issues are made up already. The battle has begun. The contest of 1888 will be repeated upon the same field and under the same commanders. The democrats must nominate Cleveland, regardless of his opinions about silver or the tariff, and the republicans will triumph or else they will finally disappear as an organization from the arena of national politics.

"If the admonitions of the reverses of 1890 are heeded, then success is possible, though the battle will be desperate, but unless there is radical readjustment, pronounced concession, sharp departure from venerable methods and precedents it will hardly be worth while to go through the formality of a convention. Hidebound intolerance, mossy proscription, academic and parochial politics, have had their day.

UNREFLECTING WESTERN ZEAL.

"The West—patient, loyal, long-suffering—has been called into revolt by the indifference, the disdain, the insolence of the East, and the elements that evolved Lincoln, Lovejoy and John Brown are now considering social, financial and economic problems with the same unreflecting zeal which their predecessors exhibited half a century ago in the consideration of the issues of secession and slavery. There is a spirit released in the ancient strongholds of republicanism which cannot be reached by the methods that were successfully employed in New York and Indiana in 1888—a temper that all the gold of Wall street cannot exorcise or subdue.

"The republicanism of the future must ally itself with these agencies, guide, control and curb them, as that of the past absorbed the ideas and purposes of the abolitionists, or it will follow the whig party into the limbo of departed spirits.

"The antics, the heroics, the false doctrines, the preposterous prescriptions of anarchists and socialists are amusing rather than alarming. No one seriously anticipates the success of a third party based upon the fatuous delusions of fiat money and subtreasury ware houses. The peril is that unless republican defections are arrested and the wanderers reclaimed the issues will be brought to insure the success of the democracy."

Judge Bruce, of the United States district court, has ordered the suspension from office of United States Commissioner Ferguson, of Colusa county, Cal., pending an investigation of the charges that he sold corn from his mill to illicit distillers; that he knew of the violation of the revenue laws, which he did not prosecute, etc.

Monday afternoon on the Fremont Andrews ranch, six miles west of San Luis Obispo, Cal., a boy named Charles Lee, employed by the Andrews brothers, got possession of a Winchester rifle and a shotgun, and when the Andrews came home to dinner from the harvest field he opened fire on them with the rifle. They took refuge behind fences or buildings and the boy fired away at them whenever they showed themselves. After exhausting his rifle cartridges he took to his shotgun, and while chasing Frederick Andrews with it he tripped and fell, and the gun was accidentally discharged, blowing the back of his head off. The boy was about 16, and was sent here from San Francisco by the Boys and Girls Aid society. His father is a carpenter, working in a San Francisco planing mill.

MISCELLANY.

AN ENGLISH SYNDICATE.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 11.—It is stated today that an English syndicate of capitalists is negotiating for the purchase of the property and plant of the American Concentrated Company located at Geyserville, Sonoma county. A branch of the works is located in London, where the company have been operating for some time past. It is stated, by authority, that the deal, which involves an expenditure of $1,000,000, will shortly be concluded. The works at Geyserville have a capacity for reducing 3000 tons of grapes annually. A representative of the purchasing syndicate is said to have concluded negotiations here, and last week returned to England to make preparations for the transfer.

SAYS IT IS NOT SO.

WASHINGTON, June 11.—Minister Romero says that the dispatch from Mexico published in New Orleans, stating that President Diaz had directed him to come to Mexico and assume the secretaryship of the treasury, had its origin in a publication made by a Mexican paper about May 20th to that effect, and so far as he knew it was without foundation. The minister further said he had no reason to believe he would be called upon to assume the treasury portfolio, as he had received no such notice from his government.

HE DESERTED.

BERLIN, June 11.—A German soldier fired on a peasant near Russingen, on the Lorraine frontier, on Monday. The peasant, a young man named Albrecht, had been drawn for the army and determined to make his escape. He darted past the sentinel, but received a bullet in the leg. This did not prevent the young conscript from escaping into France.

THE JACQUES' OUTRAGE.

BOSTON, June 11.—The recent attack upon William Jacques, of Newton, Mass., at Florence, Italy by a mob of Italians, was a more serious affair than is shown by meagre details cabled to this country. When Jacques received the American papers containing the story of the attack made upon him and his daughter, and saw that the serious nature of the case was not comprehended in this country, he wrote to the Herald an account of the incident, in which he said among other things that the attack was made on him by a mob who knew he was an American, and who threatened to lynch him. Had it not been for the coachman who drove through the crowd, he and his daughter would have been killed. Continuing he said: "I have learned that many arrests have been made, and as there were many witnesses no doubt conviction and punishment will follow. Several prominent Italian residents of Florence called on me and expressed regrets, and assured me that the mob was largely made up of ruffians from other cities, and had come there to promote the several demonstrations of May 1st.

MAY DO SO.

COLUMBIA, S. C., June 11.—Great excitement prevails among the people of Horshaw over the finding of $10,000 in gold and other valuable treasure which were buried in that neighborhood twenty four years ago when Sherman's army was passing through South Carolina. The officers of the Camden bank collected the money and jewelry and brought it near Hanging Rock creek, Kershaw county, to bury it. They were captured by Sherman's men and refused to give up their treasure. The soldiers in turn appointed one of their own number named Rhodes to bury it. Among the treasure was a gold pitcher presented by the ladies of Charleston to Calhoun. He he declared, a few days after, Rhodes said he had buried the money near an old mill, a short distance from the mouth of Hanging Rock creek, and dictated a descriptive letter to Colonel William E. Johnson, of Camden. So for the last twenty years various parties have been digging for the buried treasure, but without success. Last Friday night, however, it was found by a Mr. Rhodes, brother of the man who buried it, and a Mr. Broadnax, both of Kershaw county. The wife of the latter was duly delighted to the
