damaged and beat off the French dispatch vessel Bouvet, of superior force. Admiral Knorr has received a sailor's welcome among the British naval officers.

THE PAN AMERICAN RAILROAD.

WASHINGTON, June 26.—Advices received at the inter-continental railroad commission show that two civilian surveying parties are now well advanced in the work of surveying the country, in the vicinity of Quito and Ecuador, for the proposed railroad between North and South America. Members of the survey are afforded every possible facility in the way of promoting their work by government officials of Ecuador.

GOT SIX YEARS.

NEW YORK, June 26.—James A. Simmons, convicted of aiding Gen. Classen, president of the Sixth National bank, in the embezz ement of the funds of that institution was today sentenced to six years imprisonment in the penitentiary.

CABINET MEETING.

WASHINGTON, June 26.—At a regular meeting of the cabinet here today, the absentees were Blaine, Proctor and Miller. The principal topic of discussion was the continued coinage of silver after July.

FIVE PERSONS DROWNED.

CINCINNATI, June 26.—Thomas Thurman, Joseph Zins, Edith Zins, aged 20, Catherine Cox, aged 23, and Kate Riddle, aged 18, went boating on the Ohio river last night. The tow boat Frank Gilmore came down the river without lights, struck the yawl containing the pleasure party, and sunk it. All the occupants were drowned.

WEST POINT EXAMINATIONS.

WASHINGTON, June 26.—As a result of the recent examinations at West Point, 99 out of a total of 156 applicants have been admitted to the United States military academy to form a new class. The other cadets, who had been turned back from last year's class, who are to join the new class in September, will probably swell the total eleven.

COUNTERFEITERS ARRESTED.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., June 26.—A United States marshal has returned from Bellingot county, Mo., having in charge John C. Welker, his three sons, his son-in-law, and Alfred G. Green, who have been running a counterfeiting mill near Lutersville. A large quantity of material was found on Welker's premises there.

FATAL ACCIDENT.

ELIZABETH, N. J., June 26.—Two men were killed, two fatally injured and three seriously hurt by falling off a scaffold upon which they were working this morning.

FOR EMBEZZLEMENT.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., June 26.—The grand jury today returned an indictment against ex-State Treasurer Woodruff for embezzlement of state funds. Woodruff was immediately arrested.

IN LOVE.

NOCKSACK, June 26.—James Mc——, aged 19, attempted suicide during a meeting of the Good Templars lodge by taking fifteen grains of strychnine. His condition was discovered shortly after taking it and he was carried from the hall and a docter summoned. Physicians and friends took all night to finally bring the victim out of danger. He says he will use a bullet next time and make a clean job. He was disappointed in a love affair, but the girl's name is withheld on account of both families.

STOCKTON'S MAYOR.

STOCKTON, Cal., June 26.—Ever since W. H. Clark, new mayor of this city, has been in office he has been abused by disgruntled Republicans who failed to get expected appointments. He appointed the new police and fire commission on Monday night, and disappointed aspirants are stating that they will combine and have the mayor ousted. Under the charter there is a provision which makes ante-election promises unlawful. Kickers claim they can prove that Mayor Clark made promises.

FATAL EXPLOSION.

NEW YORK, June 26.—By the explosion of a barrel of alcohol in the basement of Columbia college yesterday, Dr. John T. Northrop, an instructor in zoology, and two assistants, William Simpson and Thomas Tighe, were seriously burned. Dr. Northrop's injuries are so serious that there is danger of death resulting. Having reason to transfer the alcohol from the barrel to small jars, Dr. Northrop called in the aid of the two janitors and taking a light, the three went into the basement. As soon as the barrel was opened the alcohol became ignited and the explosion followed. Dr. Northrop rushed from the basement with his clothing all ablaze. Some workmen nearly extinguished the flames by tearing off the doctor's clothing and with buckets of watet, but not before he had been frightfully burned about the face, arms and legs. He was taken to the Presbyterian hospital, where his injuries were pronounced exceedingly dangerous. Janitor Simpson was burned about the head and went home after his injuries were dressed. Tighe's burns were serious, but not necessarily fatal. The fire did slight damage.

Later: Dr. Northrop has died from the effects of the explosion.

NEW MASTS.

WASHINGTON, June 26.—Orders have gone forward to New York navy yards for the preparation of two new wooden masts for the cruiser "Philadelphia," to replace three steel masts now on the vessel. The vessel is found to be top heavy as at present rigged, and it rolls to an uncomfortable degree unless a water ballast is carried.

RAILROAD DISCRIMINATION CASE.

ALBANY, Ore., June 26.—The jury in the case of the State vs. E. P. Rogers, freight and passenger agent of the Southern Pacific company, indicted for discrimination in freight rates in alleged violation of section 4, Hoult law, same being long and short haul clause, this morning disagreed, and the case was continued until the October term of court. The jury stood eight for conviction, and four for acquittal. The shipments in question were consignments of wheat from Millersburg and Albany to East Portland.

HARVARD WINS.

NEW LONDON, Conn., June 26.—In the race between Yale and Harvard crews, Havatd won by eleven lengths. Time 21,23. Yale's time 21,57

This race was the sixteenth annual four mile, eight oared straight away, over the Thames course from Winthrop Point to Gates Ferry. Harvard's victory was the biggest surprise in college athletics in many years. Good judges of rowing conceded the race to Yale almost to a man and so strong was this sentiment in favor of Yale that stacks of money left at pool room went uncovered even at the odds 100 to 60. Harvard took the lead at the start. As the excitement spread some very reckless work was done by steamboat captains. That there were two collisions and no serious results was simply a matter of good luck. The scenes at the finish was of an exciting character. An observation train of 35 cars carried a large crowd while at least 75 steamers, steam and sail yachts followed the crews over the course or were anchored in desirable positions. West Bank was also crowded with sight seers.

LATEST FROM IOWA STORM.

FORT DODGE, June 26.—Latest advices from Cherokee say the damage by flood is greater than at first reported. Receding water shows hundreds of head of stock which were drowned. The work of clearing away the debris in town and along the railroads is in progress.

OMAHA, June 26.—Reports from all over the state bring the news of additional damage by wind and rain. Three cyclones passed over Palmer but did little damage to the town. In the the surrounding country, however, crops are demolished.

THE LATE STORM.

OMAHA, June 26.—Specials from various parts of Nebraska indicate Wednesday night's rain amounted to a general deluge. At Wahoo a house occupied by John Gunderson and family was struck by lightning and torn to pieces. The family were in bed at the time and the springs of the bed were melted. None of the folks were hurt. At Fremont rain fell in torrents for hours. Trains on the Fremont, Elkhorn & Wisconsin Valley road are detained by washouts. In the vicinity of York the county bridges are nearly all washed out, especially in the southern sections. The dwellings in the low places in town were invaded by the rising waters in the night, and the inhabitants had to move. At Harrison, the 16 year old daughter of John Johnson was drowned in the river. At Kearney there was a considerable electrical display of rain. Many buildings were struck by lightning, but no one was seriously hurt, but the damage was great. At Grand Island four inches of water fell during the night and much damage was done in the town.

TOPEKA, June 26.—Yesterday morning the heaviest rain storm of the season set in at this place and continued almost until noon. The reports along the railroads indicate that the storm was general only in the eastern part of the state. Both the Santa Fe and Kansas Pacific roads are washed out between here and Lawrence, and all westbound trains are laid up at Lawrence, waiting until the track can be fixed. Washouts also occurred at Williamstown, on the Union Pacific and Santa Fe. The damage to crops will be great.

SHIP WRECKED.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 26.—The ship Palestine from Tacoma, struck on the bar this morning and sunk. The crew were saved. The Palestine which was commanded by Captain McCartney, was a vessel of fourteen hundred tons and was nine days out from Tacoma with 2500 tons of coal for the Southern Pacific company. A big hole was knocked in her bottom and she sank an hour after striking, in thirteen fathoms of water. Only the tops of her masts are now visible. As soon as it was seen she must go down, Captain McCartney ordered the boats lowered and all on board, twenty-one in number, embarked safely as the sea was calm at the time and the weather clear. The tug Wizard towed the shipwrecked sailors into the harbor.

A HERO'S DEATH.

ASBURY PARK, N. J., June 26.—Fred Brokaw, aged 21, son of Isaac Brokaw, a prominent New York clothier, and Miss Annie Donahue, a servant, whose life he was endeavoring to save, were drowned at Elberon Wednesday. Three servant girls while bathing were carried out by the undertow. Their cries were heard by young Brokaw and Dr. Ferris of Philadelphia, who were sitting on the lawn of the Brokaw cottage reading.

Both leaped in to rescue the struggling girls and tried to bring them to shore, but the heavy undertow prevented them doing so. In the meantime a fisherman reached the scene with a boat and managed to get Dr. Ferris and one of the girls in it. An unknown man rescued another of the girls, but Miss Donahue, whom Brokaw had succeeded in reaching, lost her head and broke from his grasp several times. He would not desert her and struggled manfully to bring her to shore. Finally he became exhausted and before aid could reach them he sank from view with the girl in his arms. His parents witnessed the drowning and are almost frantic. Young Brokaw was a graduate of Princeton college and was captain of the base ball team.

STATE.

DIED IN AFRICA.

PORTLAND, June 26.—The sad intelligence has just reached this city of the sudden death in Southern Africa of Randolph Boelling. He was the representative of Allen & Ginter, tobacco manufacturers, and had his office at No. 16 Ash street.

The details are very meager, merely that he was thrown from horseback, and sustained a very severe fracture of his leg. Amputation was considered necessary, and after it had been performed symptoms of lockjaw set in. Finally the dread malady seized him and he died from the effects of it.

Mr. Boelling first came to this coast in 1884 and has been here more or less of his time since except a trip of fourteen months when he took a trip around the world. He was on a second trip of this nature with the intention of remaining in India as the resident agent of his employers in that country.

EUGENE CITY, June 26.—Special to JOURNAL: Street cars made their first trip today, will commence running regular tomorrow, town full of people.

EXTRAORDINARY ACCIDENT.

ALBINA, Or., June 26.—Fred Habn met with an extraordinary and painful accident Wednesday night. He was playing ball with some friends when he tried to make a longer throw than usual. It resulted in breaking his arm in two places, one between the elbow and shoulder and the other between the elbow and wrist. The breaking of one bone under such circumstances sometimes occurs, but to snap three is an unheard of accident.

FOREIGN.

PARNELL'S MARRIAGE.

LONDON, June 26.—The Parnellites profess confidence that the marriage will restore their leader to his position. This however, is not generally believed. As for his social position, Parnell never had any, because he never mixed in society, and his marrige will, his opponents think, make no difference in the attitute of the Irish clergy toward him. Mrs. Parnell was seen at Brighton on Tuesday by a reporter, who says she looked as charming as she ever did in her life. The polling for the Carlow vacancy will take place July 7, and Mr. Parnell will take an active part in the contest, as he is said to feel a personal interest in carrying the district, which has been heretofore regarded as one of his strongholds.

THE MIDNIGHT HOUR.

In the heart of western Pennsylvania's beautiful and fertile valleys lies the picturesque town of M——. The unsightly chimney stacks of noisy industry have not yet marred its picturesqueness, and business, with a few exceptions, is sufficient to maintain a quiet commercial equilibrium which the fever of enterprise has never disturbed. The principal impetus to trade is given by the sojourn of three or four hundred students at the collegiate institution located on an eminence overlooking the town.

At this place I spent four years, preparing for subsequent collapse in the practical world. There were other enthusiasts whose ardor felt the tempering process during the latter part of the course, and who, after the spasm of commencement, have continued to. Among these I found a companion to my fancy who, in the main, was my complete antithesis. And this will probably account for the warm friendship which attached us, undisturbed save by a few minor differences which the slightest advance from either would reconcile.

Stanley Wirt was a quiet looking fellow, possessing an honest face and a corresponding reputation. This good name, I judged, was principally due to passivity, and I shortly discovered his disposition to be sensitive and retiring, enforcing a certain amount of avoidance of ordinary companionship. He thus illustrated the principle that a man may not be ill judged who has not committed himself. To me, however, his daily companion, he revealed a nature rich in endowments, requiring only the harsh surveillance of discipline to render them effective. But as I considered his sensitiveness, his reluctance to express, even to his intimates, his peculiar views of humanity, I felt certain he would never submit even the hardiest of these mental offspring to the rigid scrutiny of the commercial minded publisher.

He unraveled with the greatest ease the intricate tangles of idiomatic wretchedness and involved Latin and Greek. And I must acknowledge that I frequently made use of his superior penetration to prepare my labored translation for the disturbing supervision of the class Argus. It was not difficult to notice the chief tendency of his mind, for an examination of that portion of his library which claimed his unwearied attention revealed a love for that weird, imaginative, legendary lore usually so disastrous to practical mindedness. I ... never beheld in the limited space such a collection of tales and traditions of this kind, embodying the superstitions of nearly every civilized nation.

By the usual perversity of fate this retiring, modest fellow was gifted with a voice melodious and pleasing enough to have cajoled the affections of the most obdurate maid. The only use he made of it, however, was to read, at night, some of these illusive romances which, although I sometimes wearied of them, I enjoyed on account of the way they were rendered. Often, in this manner, we became so deeply absorbed in these unnatural themes that I felt a sense of relief to know that the journey to bed was but a few short steps across a lighted apartment, and not up flights of shadow haunted staircases.

During the latter part of the course the citizens of M—— were very much disturbed by a series of skillfully executed burglaries. Houses were rifled with surprising frequency, considering the amount of attention attracted in this direction, and the evidence of a certain amount of guiding intelligence was the most disturbing aspect of the case, as the plunder secured by these midnight depredators was usually most profitable. Not the slightest indication as yet had suggested a clew that might lead to the solving of the mystery.

One evening, in order to escape the hubbub in the dormitory, Stanley and I left the college hall and strolled slowly down the street. On the way conversation fell on the late burglaries, and from that, by an unaccountable leap, to animal magnetism, which was at that time exciting considerable interest and comment. A peculiarly gifted exponent of the principle was then in town, and several of the students had permitted themselves to be subjected to the influence. Knowing Stanley's retiring disposition and the ready belief he accorded to all demonstrations of this nature, I asked:

"Why not go and see Professor B——? Perhaps he may be able to mould your will to his designs."

He began: "I believe you will acknowledge, remembering past experience, that I am disturbed by a peculiar distrust of myself in the presence of any strong influence or emotion. I have also discovered that the struggle to avoid their effects is not only exhausting, but depressing, and should I chance to yield eventually the surrender is all the more overwhelming and disastrous to me. Moreover, I distrust"——

He paused abruptly and seemed lost in reverie.

"Continue," I urged. "What do you distrust?"

No answer. This caused me to look upon his face, when I beheld a glance of such intent directness that my own quickly followed his. I discovered nothing but the ordinary aspect of the street, yet I must confess that I was startled. I roughly grasped him by the shoulder and shook him.

"What does this mean?" I asked.

No response, save a long, distressing sigh.

"Stanley! Stanley!" I exclaimed, "are you ill?" And as I asked the question the lonely surroundings, his intense abstraction, caused a cold chill to creep shudderingly over me. I was about to resume my rough treatment when, with an effort, he seemed to regain command over himself, and appeared startled to see me gazing so intently at him.

"That is what I am anxious to discover," I replied. "Do you mean to say that you are unaware of you startling pause of silence and forgetfulness of my presence?"

A confused look passed over his face, and he mumbled to himself, but would speak no further.

"Well, you are entertaining company," I exclaimed. "I'll leave you to your engrossing reflections," and I turned to depart.

Stanley, however, grasped me by the arm and cried, "No, no! do not leave! let us return." And as we retraced our steps he endeavored, by a series of incoherent remarks, to make amends for his momentary forgetfulness.

I believe it was about three days after this occurrence that we sat in our room in the deepening dusk, and Stanley, apparently forgetful of his late abstraction, seemed in the lightest of moods. He even grew witty and indulged in a little light raillery against one of my trifling propensities. Presently he reached down one of the lighter tales of his collection, and shortly caught my fancy with one of his melodiously rendered illusions. He read on smoothly, pausing here and there to admire some skillfully wrought expression or delicacy of thought. His eyes were filled with a dreamy expression, as he dwelt upon such passages as the following:

There is a glamour in the distance,
Hazy mountains dimly seen,
As some vaporous resistance,
Hangs its curtains o'er the green.
Like the sunlight on the mountain,
Through the mists which intervene,
Like the sprinkling, sparkling fountain,
And its filmy, shimmering sheen,
Are the fancies now beguiling
Softest languor in my brain;
When there moves the easy, smiling,
Unsubstantial phantom train.

In the midst of my delight the MS. fell upon the floor, and again that peculiar condition of mind and body of the previous night came over him. I said nothing, startled though I was, and endeavored to study, as closely as possible, this extraordinary phenomenon. Presently he rose to his feet, and, after a moment's pause, moved slowly toward the door. I started to intercept him, but checked the impulse, concluding to follow, and, if possible, discover the cause of this unusual occurrence. I grasped my hat and even placed his own upon his head, to which he gave no heed.

Descending the dormitory stairs, he passed through the open door and moved rapidly down the street. I followed closely; indeed, I might have walked arm-in-arm with him undiscovered, as if invisible. I noticed that he followed the course of our previous stroll; but, passing the point at which we halted, he turned into a side street, dimly lighted by a flickering lamp. Just as I was congratulating myself that we were unobserved, the district night watch emerged from the darkness and was about to hail us. I motioned silence by a quick gesture, and beckoned him to follow, which he did, filled with wonder, no doubt, at the unusual proceeding.

As quickly as possible I explained the situation to the incredulous watchman, who continued with me, nevertheless, to witness the conclusion of what he considered an extravagant freak.

Stanley by this time had reached an obscure dwelling, before which he paused irresolutely. The door at the moment was opened, a light flashed out into the darkness, a muscular looking man beckoned to him with a peculiar gesture, and Stanley entered the hallway, upon which the door was closed.

"This is getting interesting," I exclaimed as we emerged from the shadows into which we had dodged as the door opened.

We hastily traversed the intervening space and lightly hurried to a crevice in the shutter, through which a ray of light issued. The window was raised, as the weather was still oppressive, and on looking through the slats we beheld Stanley standing in the midst of a dismal looking chamber, impassive as a statue. Before him stood a peculiar looking personage—a powerful man, loosely dressed in ill fitting garments, with both hands extended in a peculiar manner toward the silent lad. A restless pair of deep set, brilliant black eyes dwelt as those of a basilisk upon the dull orbs of Stanley. A flowing beard concealed the character of his mouth and chin, his nose was a strongly marked aquiline, over which thick set eyebrows met, and these, together with his projecting forehead, gave his countenance the most sinister of aspects.

"Ah! I understand," thought I;
