SUGGESTED COMMENT.

He prayeth best
Who loveth best:
He loveth best
Who doeth best.

The JOURNAL is not an alleged newspaper. It is a newspaper every day in the week but Sunday.

A communication that would open a very extensive religious controversy is respectfully declined.

The "10 cent bank" is looking up so many coins of that denomination as to embarrass the national treasury by creating scarcity of silver change. Our financial system is too easily embarrassed. But great is the dime.

An alliance orator told the farmers at Sedgwick, Kan., that "there was no more reason why they should be republicans because their fathers were republicans than they should be bachelors because their fathers were bachelors."

Des Moines Register: The farmers of Iowa this year planted 784,984 acres more corn than last year. This at a loss of 67 cents an acre—the governor's estimate—amounts to $501,010.28. What fools the farmers must be to deliberately go to work and lose half a million dollars more this year than last.

If you undertook to get rid of the codlin moth early in the season by spraying the apple trees, follow up the good work now by gathering and feeding all the fallen apples at once, or turn the pigs in the orchard and they will attend to this part of the work. Keep up systematic efforts for two or three years, and in the end you will be rewarded by again having perfect apples.

Australia's "magnificent crop of superior wheat," recently harvested, says the Milling World, is sinking very small. The first figures placed the total for export at 20,000,000 bushels, the second figures dropped to 15,000,000 bushels, the third to 10,000,000 bushels and the actual figures of export to a little less than 4,000,000 bushels. It must make the British importers tired to see the boom crops of the English colonies flizzle regularly every year to small proportions.

The Father Mollinger craze in Pennsylvania has almost subsided, and the people who flocked to him by thousands to be healed are beginning to realize that they were victimized by their own credulity. It seems that Father Mollinger did succeed, by means of the "mind cure," in convincing a number of people they were not sick. Crowds besieged his door, and before it was demonstrated that the father was only an ordinary mortal he had treated thousands of persons, all of whom made a contribution of $5 each, and many of whom went hundreds of miles to find no other relief.—Ex.

EX-SENATOR McDONALD.

Sioux City, Ia., Journal (Rep):—The death of ex-Senator Joseph E. McDonald, of Indiana, removes from the active politics of the country one of the strongest champions of the democratic party, and one of the ablest men of that organization.

No Indiana save Mr. Hendricks had the power that Mr. McDonald had in the democratic politics of Indiana. He was a courageous leader and an indefatigable worker. He was a strong partisan, but he was a man of well-defined convictions, and his grasp on public questions was firm and strong. He was more resolute in the pursuit of his purposes than Mr. Hendricks was, for Mr. Hendricks was more given to heeding popular demands, to adjusting his positions to popular currents. Mr. McDonald was more such a type of man as Oliver P. Morton, the great governor of Indiana in war times, and the great leader of republicans. Mr. McDonald was a self-reliant man. His education from boyhood had been calculated to strengthen the lines of his character in this respect. He was what is called a "self-made man"—that is, he commenced life a poor boy, fatherless, and was compelled to make his own contest for a place in the world. Thus he learned a trade early in life, and from his own earnings he educated himself and fitted himself for the profession of law.

Mr. McDonald was not continuously before the public as Mr. Hendricks was, and for reasons that have been suggested. He did not readily adapt himself to the varying winds of politics. His strength was rather in work separated from his immediate personal interests than in work involving his own chances of office. He was district attorney; was elected to congress in 1849; was defeated by Mr. Morton for the governorship in 1874, and was elected to the United States senate in 1878, where he served one term. He did not hold office afterwards, but devoted himself to the practice of his profession in Indianapolis.

Mr. McDonald did not trust himself to the crazes of his party. He stood with Randall with reference to the tariff, and he did not surrender to the greenbackers in the days of that temptation. He contended for what he believed to be right within his own party. Therefore his notable contest against ex-Gov. Gray. Mr. Hendricks was the more available.

The courage of the man was well illustrated in his last days. With incurable disease upon him he faced the certainty of death unflinchingly. His age was 72 years.

NO THIRD PARTY FOR TEXAS.

St. Louis Republic (democrat): Bro. Jim Davis and his third party friends in Texas are going to hold a sort of love feast at Sulphur Springs, on July 3, in order to give the people's party a send-off down there. One object of the meeting, doubtless, is to capture the farmers' alliance, and we therefore beg leave to call Mr. Davis' attention to the significant resolutions recently adopted by the Prairie Dell Alliance No. 2744, in Bell county, Texas. The resolutions are too long to be reproduced here in full, but the Republic specially commends the following paragraphs to the attention of Mr. Davis and his third party friends, in and out of Texas:

Whereas, We view with sadness and alarm the efforts of some of our alliance leaders to pervert the order from the noble and praiseworthy purposes for which it was founded into a political party machine, to advance the interest of corrupt and designing men and to foist upon the country in the form of law the impracticable folly known as the suit-treasury bill; and

Whereas, Recently, to wit, on the 4th day of March, 1891, at Austin, Tex., a certain number of alliance brethren, including our brother, Hon. W. P. Hancock, inspired, as we believe, by the true alliance principles and earnest devotion to the cause, issued a circular to the brotherhood of Texas, warning them of the dangers that threaten the order and urging them to relieve it from the weight that was crushing the life and usefulness out of it and bring it back to its original principles and purposes; therefore

Resolved, That we are unalterably opposed to a third party created in the alliance, are opposed to the subversive scheme, and condemn the course of the alliance leaders, be they high or low, who would use the alliance to advance these purposes.

Resolved, That we believe the alleged circular contains substantially a true statement of facts and that the signers thereof were moved by the best intentions, are true alliance men, honorable gentlemen, and acted for the best interests of the order, and especially do we know this to be true of our neighbor and brother member, W. P. Hancock, in whose honor, truth, integrity and devotion to the alliance cause as set forth in the declaration of principles, we have full and implicit confidence, and any insinuations enumerated to the contrary by sore-headed politicians, subversive advocates and third parties we brand as false, malicious and slanderous.

The allusion to "sore-headed politicians" may be unkind, but it pretty aptly describes a good many of the enterprising gentlemen who are trying to smother the alliance in order that a new political party may fall heir to its assets.

Taking the resolutions as a whole, they are believed to represent the sentiment that is dominant in the farmers' alliance of Texas, and if this be so, Texas stands with Missouri in the determination not to permit a non-partisan organization to be drawn into politics by the thin pretence of setting up a third party.

EXPORT OF FARM PRODUCTS.

Several democratic papers, either willfully or ignorantly, continue to claim that the exports of cattle and hogs have decreased under the operations of the McKinley law. The truth is that exports of farm products have increased under this best of all tariff laws. If the democratic papers which have been misrepresenting the law will consult the government's summary statement of imports and exports, corrected up to June 3, they will find the facts and figures. Take the exports for the ten months ending April 30, 1891, and compare with exports for the ten months ending April 30, 1890, we have:

	1891.	1890.
Cattle	$20,163,376	$24,789,858
Hogs	1,805,076	746,435
Horses	660,264	516,414

In cattle alone there has been an increase of nearly $2,000,000 during the ten months. In hogs the showing is in favor of the McKinley law by over a quarter of a million. These facts do not help the theory that exports have decreased. On the contrary they show that exports have actually increased. During the same period covered in the foregoing table the exports of fresh beef increased from a little over $19,000,000 to over $12,000,000. In other beef products there was a corresponding increase, all going to show that export business has flourished under the McKinley law.—Des Moines Register.

LIKE A HERO.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., June 28.—In a letter concerning the killing of Colonel Sam Wood, Editor A. A. Dunmore, of the Wooddale, Kan., Tribune, says that Brennan was a noted desperado, but when arrested was not even deprived of his revolvers. He was about the streets, and was treated like a hero by the people of Hugotown. Dunmore declares that no one believes that Brennan will ever be tried. Colonel McKay, Wood's law partner, said Friday.

I never want a man from the Thirty-second judicial district to enter my office until he can come in and report that Judge Botkin and the whole outfit have been killed. The people down there are not what they once were if they permit such an outrage to pass unavenged.

HAS A NERVE.

NEWARK, N. J., June 28.—The police of this city are endeavoring to find Edward A. Fuller, a young collector, who is charged with embezzlement. Benjamin Franklin Frankford, manager of the New York branch of the Chicago Century, a traders' journal, is the complainant. Mr. Frankford has been in this city for some time, "writing up" the business places here, and Fuller was assisting him. Last Monday Frankford gave Fuller some bills to collect. He has not been seen since, but on Wednesday he received this frank confession in the handwriting of the missing man:

I guess you will regret sending me out to collect bills. I owe you $201.60. I hadn't the nerve to go to the hotel this morning. Don't get rattled, and depend upon me to settle matters. I lost most of the money on the races.

HORRIBLE VENGEANCE.

MILAN, TRIB., June 28.—Twenty-two years ago there lived in a small town in Texas a respectable family named Paine. A son was born and christened Ransom. Not long afterward Mr. Paine had a fight with a man named Wyne, with several aliases, who was an unprincipled scoundrel. The latter was worsted in the fight and swore vengeance. The Paines lived in peace until their son was two years of age. Mr. Paine had forgotten the threat. One night Mr. Paine was called away from home on business, leaving his family alone. The boy was sleeping in a crib in his mother's room near the open window. She was forced to leave the room for a few minutes and upon her return was horrified to find the crib empty. The frantic woman ran to the nearest neighbor and a posse scoured the country. The husband was sent for and every means was employed to find the missing child, but without avail. The search was kept up for two weeks, the agonized father spending large sums of money in the search. Finally the parents became discouraged and gave their son up as lost. The father resolved to leave the scene of his great trouble and a few months later moved to Tennessee, locating at Huron. From there they moved to Milan. In the meanwhile a girl was born to them and christened Nina. The father embarked in the real estate business here, and accumulated considerable money. The girl grew up believing that she was the only child. She developed from year to year until she is now a beautiful maiden, much admired by the young men. About a year ago a young man came to this city from Galveston, Texas. Having some capital he opened a large mercantile establishment, and entering into society, was much sought after by the mamma who knew of his financial standing. Miss Paine several years ago made her debut into society, and from the first a mutual love sprang up between the two young people, and they were soon engaged. Monday last they were married in a manner befitting their social standing.

Tuesday morning the groom received a note penned in a strange hand, stating that the writer had some important news to tell him and that he would be in Milan Tuesday. That day a rough man alighted from the Memphis train and went to Mr. Paine's office. After conversing for a short time the stranger's manner changed and in a different manner he exclaimed:

John Paine, don't you know me? Don't you know the man who only
