STATE HOUSE NOTES.

El. Giltner is home, looking rugged from his month in the mountains. Supt. McElroy is expected home next Sunday from California.

The railroad commission will adjourn Thursday, after making their findings in regard to further hearing of Union Pacific attorneys. The representations of the Union Pacific had a hearing before the Oregon railway commission Tuesday, and were given until Thursday of this week to file application for further time to make showing against reduction of rates.

Miss Lucy Williams and Miss Georgia Giltner are home from their trip to St. Helens. These young ladies are true Oregonian types of sweet sixteen, and the only ones who have ever ascended that snowy peak which is 12,000 feet high and plainly visible from Salem, tho' nearly 100 miles away. They naturally feel very proud of their achievement and made the dangerous trip with Mr. Ed. Giltner of the secretary of state's office. They are receiving the congratulations of their friends.

THE SALEM CONFERENCE.

Mayor's Address of Welcome—Bishop's Response—Second Day's Proceedings.

The annual conference of the M. E. church in session at Salem, Bishop J. N. Fitz Gerald presiding, organized Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock.

The newly decorated auditorium of the First church was well filled to witness the exercises and social reception of the members of conference.

PUBLIC SERVICE.

After prayer Rev. C. E. Cline introduced Mayor D'Arcy, who proceeded to deliver a formal address of welcome. His remarks were appropriate to the occasion and of substance he said:

As mayor of Salem, the capital of Oregon, I extend you a cordial welcome to our city and tender you its freedom.

There is no more appropriate place to hold your annual conference. In Salem and vicinity your early missionaries established themselves, and your meeting here will recall vividly to your minds the sacrifices that were made by those who left home and friends in the East for the purpose of christianizing the Indians and establishing your church in the wilds of Oregon.

The Methodist church of Salem has kept pace with the progress of our section of country. Its members have erected a large and commodious church edifice that is a credit to the congregation. It is gratifying to be able to say that since the early missionaries first settled here that Salem has become such a beautiful place, with elegant homes and imposing buildings of every character. We recognize in its wide streets and the manner in which it is laid out the broad and liberal mind of its early owners, and especially Dr. W. H. Wells.

What a grand work for the young has the Willamette university accomplished since its first establishment. Many of the leading men of the state have been educated there. The present institution under the name of the Oregon institute and Willamette university has existed since 1834. Your early missionaries saw the necessity of such an institution and labored hard to establish it. The alumni of the school and the large number of old students are a credit to the institution. The memory of Rev. Jason Lee, Rev. David Leslie, Father Waller and others of your early missionaries should be held in grateful remembrance for the part they took in establishing an educational institution of your church such as you have here today.

Salem is historic ground for the Methodist church. What inspiration is there here for every true Methodist? Here were the scenes of the early struggles of the Methodist church in Oregon. Here lie buried Bishop Haven, Father Wilbur and many others of your early missionaries. I congratulate you on selecting our city for the purpose of holding your annual conference; a place hallowed with all the past associations of your church in the state. It was here that your church in Oregon made its beginning, and although population has given you larger and wealthier congregations in Portland, yet wealth and large congregations cannot supply the historic character and grandeur of the work of your early missionaries that cluster around and cling to Salem. The remembrance of the past, bringing to your minds the early struggles of your missionaries, animate you with a zeal for your church that nothing else could do. The self denial and sacrificing spirit manifested by Rev. Jason Lee and others like him, should not be forgotten by you and your successors as long as the Methodist Episcopal church of Oregon exists.

THE BISHOP'S RESPONSES.

Rev. Cline introduced Bishop J. N. Fitz Gerald, of Minneapolis, who very feelingly responded to the mayor's welcome. The bishop declared the mayor was right when he said the conference was to be congratulated upon having chosen Salem as its meeting place this year. He had been over the city and about her wide streets and had seen much here to admire, and in behalf of the conference, he expressed their individual and collective gratification at being such a pleasant city and so commodious a church building in which to conduct their deliberations and such genial people among whom to be appointed.

WEDNESDAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

The conference prayer was opened this morning with a sacramental service at 9:30, led by the bishop. The committees meet in the afternoon, public sessions are held in the evening. All the business of the conference is transacted at the morning in sitting.

Wm. Howard Phelps and family start for the East tomorrow, Mr. Phelps going to New York for the treatment of his spinal troubles, while the family will remain in Nebraska. It seems as if textbooks for children were now made so simple as to leave hardly any chance for misunderstanding, but the little folks still continue to commit to memory the words without much thought of their meaning. "How do we know that the earth is round?" asked a teacher of one of her boys. The pupil rose promptly and, with a perfectly stolid expression, answered glibly, "We learn that the earth is round from the following facts," and immediately sat down again, evidently feeling that he had given a full and most satisfactory reply.—Christian Intelligencer.

Why the Earth is Round. In the case of horses, where the skin has been abraded by the harness, if the galled region is left to itself the hair will grow in, but be colorless, while if oil is applied freely to the abrasion hair of a dark or normal color will be produced, thus indicating that the color is ordinarily due to the secretions of the skin sinking down as a sediment to the base of the hair follicle, where it is absorbed by the shaft of the hair.—Hyland C. Kirk in New York Times.

THE MAN WITH THE MUSKET.

They are building as I have been built, to the sky. With clash and confusion of speech, they are piling up monuments massive and high. To lift a few names out of reach. And the passionate great laureled god of the great. In a whimsical riddle of stone. Has chosen a few from the field and the state To sit on the steps of his throne.

But I-I will pass from this rage of renown, This ant hill commotion and strife; Pass by where the marbles and bronzes look down. With their fast frozen features of life. On, out of the nameless who lie 'neath the gloom. Of the plying cypress and pine; Your man is the man of the sword and the plume, But the man with the musket is mine.

I knew him, I tell you. And also I know When he fell on the battle sweet ridge, That the poor battered body that lay there in blue. Was only a plank in the bridge. Over which some should pass to a fame. That shall shine while the high stars shall shine!

Your hero is known by an echoing name, But the man of the musket is mine. I knew him! All through him the good and the bad. Ran together and equally free; But I judge, as I trust Christ has judged the past few days.

For death made him noble to me! In the cyclone of war, in the battle's eclipse, Life shook out its lingering sands, And he died with the names that he loved on his lips. His musket still grasped in his hands! Up close to the flag my soldier went down. In the silent front of the line. You may take for your heroes the men of renown. But the man of the musket is mine!

There is peace in the May laden grace of the hours. That come when the day's work is done. And peace with the nameless, who under the flowers. Lie asleep in the slant of the sun. Best that shall put out light and silence all sound; There is rife pit strength in the gravel They sleep well who sleep, be they crowned or uncrowned. And death will be kind to the brave. —Milwaukee Sentinel.

How Silk is Weighted. Various methods have been resorted to, with different and in some cases far from satisfactory results, in the weighing of silk, particular efforts having been made in this direction by French and German manufacturers, each having its peculiar advantages, or otherwise. In one of the processes now generally adopted the plan pursued is to reduce the bichloride by water to 30 degs. Reaumur, any stronger solution being likely to injure the fiber, while at 34 degs. the silk is found to become rough and valueless, and at 40 degs. the fiber is dissolved.

The silk is well worked in the solution until complete saturation is effected, allowed to remain two hours in the liquor, and then taken out and washed. The adaptation of this simple method is made apparent in the fact that one dip adds about 8 per cent. to the weight, and three treatments give an increase of about 25 per cent. Bare hands are not used in working the goods in bichloride of tin at 20 degs. Reaumur, as it acts injuriously. The silk has to be well washed before being soaped.—New York Sun.

A Bible Legend of the Panther. One of the oddest tales in the "Bibliaries," or stories of Bible animals written by the monks, is the legend of the panther. "The panther," so the homily runs, "is the most beautiful of all beasts. More than this, when it goes abroad it diffuses a marvelous sweet perfume. This odor is so sweet that all the other beasts and birds follow the panther wherever it goes. Wherefore the panther is a type of virtue." Perhaps the old monks who borrowed and embellished this story had heard of and misunderstood the strong love of sweet scents which the panther and its relations, the lions and leopards, often show.—Spectator.
