Some Substantial Improvements Being Made—How to Build Up An Addition.

If the question were asked how shall we build up a town or an addition, the JOURNAL would say "the way to build it is to build it."

success, and the way to get it is to get it.

THE FRUIT PALACE.

Detailed Plans Ready to be Submitted to the Meeting Saturday.

The draughtsmen in Architect McCall's office have been busy several days drawing details of plans and specifications for the Oregon fruit palace to be erected on the fair grounds under the direction of the Marion County Fruit Growers' association.

A colossal sketch of the palace as it will appear when complete will be ready to be shown at the meeting, and it is expected to have estimates of the cost of the building and expense of decorations.

If the plan of the committee is carried out it will take more than ten tons of fruit, besides what will go in glass, to make the display will be arranged from the standpoint of artistic effects that can be achieved by arranging fruits in masses.

The result will be the greatest surprise to the people of this county themselves. The committee are preparing a circular soliciting co-operation of all the fruit growers in the county and also of the ladies in assisting in the show of canned fruits not now in season.

GRIDER'S RIDE FOR LIFE.

Pursued by a Pack of Wolves, the Wisconsin Man Makes a Desperate Leap.

In one of the wildest portions of Wisconsin when it was a wild frontier state had settled the noted pioneer Hank Grider, a man whose wonderful endurance of limb is a measure illustrated by his sketch.

One dark and rainy night of the year 1853 the brave pioneer, whose reckless nature had won for him the title of Wild Grider, and by which he was known far and wide, found himself some fifteen miles from home and with the Kakanook river, swollen and turbulent from the recent rain, between himself and his destination.

Wolves howled upon every hand, but he paid no particular attention to them, pressing steadily on in the dreaching rain.

At length, however, he noticed that the grin scavengers of the forest were beginning to congregate in large numbers into the trail behind him, and drawing uncomfortably near, howling and snarling at one another as they came.

This served to give him a slight uneasiness of mind as he urged his horse forward.

Steadily the horde of wet, shaggy forms increased in number until it seemed that a thousand of them were crowding along upon the pioneer's track, making the night hideous with their babel of snarling voices.

How swiftly in pursuit came that writhing mass of now thoroughly enraged brutes, and though the pioneer was remarkably swift of foot he had to put forth every effort to keep out of their way, and there in the darkness of the Wisconsin wilderness ensued a desperate race for life and death.

The ground was fairly smooth, and this aided the desperate man somewhat, but he was compelled to use the spurs mercilessly to escape those clashing jaws.

Like the very wind he sped along, his only hope lying in reaching the river in advance of his fierce pursuers, for once across the turbulent current he would be safe.

But fully five miles lay between him and the river, and it would indeed be a miracle to reach it; but wholly undaunted the reckless fellow sped on, his teeth closed firmly and his eyes gleaming with all the fire of his wild, excitable nature.

Mile after mile was cast behind, and daylight was beginning to steal over the land when the swift and swollen Kakanook river in sight.

The ground sloped toward it, and down this descent fell pursued and pursuers, with scarce six feet separating them.

For over five miles had that desperate race continued, and now, exhausted as he was by his superhuman speed, Grider performed a feat that was simply marvelous and almost unparalleled.

The banks of the stream were high and projecting, and scarcely eighty rods below the river fell over a mass of jagged rocks that no one could hope to pass over alive, while it would be impossible to effect a landing when once in the turbulent current.

With that horde of raging beasts close behind him, and the dangerous river below, and fully twenty-five feet between its banks, the brave pioneer was truly in a most desperate situation.

But, scarcely realizing his danger, in his desperation and frenzy, he galloped down the slope, and, putting every effort of his horse's fast falling strength in one mighty leap, landed squarely upon the other bank of the river.

The wolves were unable to check their headlong speed, and many of their number went over the bank and were swept away, while the exhausted steed trembled upon the ground.

Three hours later, however, he reached his cabin in safety, and in a few days had fully recovered from the effects of that terrible ride for life—the most extraordinary one in the entire record of the west.

Grider's life was one of remarkable adventures, and now, a man of superior endurance, although nearly sixty years of age, he resides at Moose Lake, Minn., where his life is still a stirring and eventful one.—Yankee Blade.

Not a Musician.

One of Chicago's young men had been calling on one of Chicago's young ladies for a time. The young lady has a little brother, and a few Sundays ago the little brother and the admirer of the sister were left in each other's society.

"Why don't you bring your violin with you some time?" asked the brother. "I have no violin, my little man," said the admirer of the sister. "Pa thinks you have," added the boy. "What did he say?" asked the lover, "that shows he thinks I have a violin!"

"Why," said the ever innocent youth, "I heard him tell me that he guessed you were fiddling around after some money." The foregoing is a true story, the sequel to which is the lover has ceased to fiddle.—Chicago Herald.

Cape Cod Is Disappearing. There isn't the least doubt but that Cape Cod is gradually being eaten up by the greedy ocean. Less than 100 years ago a lighthouse was placed on the headland by the government.

The original deed calls for a plot of ten acres in extent. At the present time the enclosure embraces hardly six acres. On a point just north of the marine stations at Highland light the face of the bluff has moved in nearly 250 feet in the last seven years. At this rate it is only a question of time when Cape Cod will be a thing of the past.—St. Louis Republic.

The World Fertilized.

The facilities of the present day for the production of everything that will conduce to the material welfare and comfort of mankind are almost unlimited, and when Syrup of Figs was first produced the world was enriched with the only perfect laxative known, as it is the only remedy which is truly pleasing and refreshing to the taste and prompt and effectual to cleanse the system gently in the Spring-time or, in fact, at any time, and the better it is known the more popular it becomes.
