Concluded from first page.

hour in wigging the youngster for shortcomings in almost every item. Late again for parade. Violent with a Sepoy. Hadn't the faintest notion of his drill, and so on.

"What on earth am I to say for you, sir?" he had asked angrily, tapping the bundle of uncompromising papers at which Billy glanced with rueful despair in his honest eyes. "You are distinctly careless, wanting in tact, useless at office work—what's the use of complaining of your writers, sir—inattentive and argumentative. Ride! Of course; and that's about all you're fit for. That and tennis, but unluckily these won't advance you in your profession, nor gain you respect, nor fit you for a command."

Then the colonel had stolen a look at the frank, bright face, and thought for the millionth time how ridiculous it all was. The lad was honorable and brave. Why not trust to time and training to do the rest? He wanted a tight hand over him of course, but why be forced to send up a nasty, disparaging report of him to headquarters?

Somehow the colonel could not find it in his heart to do it, and was still worrying over it when a telegram was brought in addressed "To the officer commanding." This was followed shortly by a knock at the rough door opening outward on to the cold, wind swept inclosure, a struggle to shut the same, and a tall, smart looking officer entered, helmet in hand.

"Oh, that's you, Hamerton! I was just going to send for you. There's a row up Khunaz way. James, of the police, wounded. Ghazis again killed a lot of people. I'm ordered to send an intelligent officer to investigate the thing and report. You'll have a ticklish job, but I can rely upon you. I've been thinking whom you had better take. You see, I can only spare one of two—either Bates or Thompson. Bates has the longest head, and yet Thompson—well, if it came to blows, somehow I should prefer Thompson. But do as you like."

As he said this the colonel instinctively glanced at the pile of papers beside him. Bates' name happened to lie uppermost, with its every question snugly and neatly answered. Thompson's had frisked off gayly in the draught of the open door, and was but just saved from being chewed under the table by Hamerton's puppy, who had followed his master in.

"It shall be little Billy," said Major Hamerton to himself; and proceeding to the discussion of further details concerning escort and commissariat arrangements for the small expedition.

A little before nightfall they started, a party of fifteen in all: the two English officers—Billy in a state of the wildest joy and bursting with importance—a duffedar, and twelve Sowars of the Khunaz Horse. A second telegram had been received soon after the first saying that the Ghazis, who were few in number, had taken themselves off; that a native hospital assistant was in charge of James, the wounded police officer; and that he was to be brought back here, because there was no other European doctor nearer than Quetta.

"Hope we come across the beggars," Billy said, gleefully.

But the colonel, who had ridden out a little way with the party, and had wished them "good luck," found himself saying something like a prayer in his heart for the safe return of the two men, who were, in his opinion, the very pick of the regiment.

In times of peace these inglorious little brushes with sneaking Ghazis are not among the pleasantest features of service in Afghanistan. To an old soldier they savor too much of that potting from behind hedges with which the Irish peasantry have familiarized us, and to which no military glory is attached. He does not care about sending out good men to furnish targets for skulking devils, who have no ground of quarrel, but are merely possessed of a fanatical desire to spill Feringhee blood. Wherefore the commanding officer was ill at ease, and for the next two days there fell a dullness and a malaise upon everybody in camp. Like the influenza it attacked them all, from the colonel downward, only, as Kipling says, that is another story.

It was in the spring of 1890 that the influenza came sweeping over Afghanistan, death laden from European cities. It was when April had cast its brief ethereal spell upon this barren spot, and had woven a fairy carpet of flowers all over the plain, teaching the grim landscape the meaning of a smile. Only for a few beautiful days in all the year is the ground moist and fragrant, and covered with delicate short lived blossoms. Like lovely ghosts they come and go—the white wild hyacinth bells, the small red tulip, the exquisite purple iris. It was with these sweet visitors that the influenza came, dealing suffering and death among the lonely scattered outposts, where comforts are few and luxuries for the sick unprocurable.

But in this January the plain was barren of any verdure or vegetation, save for a leafless shrub that grows low upon the earth and gives out a fragrance resembling that of wild thyme. And you could see right away to the horizon in one direction and as far as a chain of low, rocky hills in the other.

Upon the third day after the departure of the expedition the colonel rode out to reconnoiter along with the doctor, who was always game for a ride. The commanding officer was more anxious than he allowed to appear. Somehow a two years' sojourn in those dreary wilds draws men very close together when they are made of good stuff. The party ought to have returned ere this, and the colonel's heart was disquieted within him. He was scanning the horizon carefully, when suddenly he pulled up and shaded his eyes.

"What's that little cloud of dust, doctor? Is it a 'devil' or a couple of horsemen?"

The doctor, whose eyes were younger, answered that it was no "devil," but horsemen, and that they were making for camp.

"By Jove!" exclaimed the colonel with his field glasses up, "it is—it's Thompson and a Sowar!"

In another moment they were cutting across to meet them.

Billy was riding a length or two in front, and his jaded horse pulled up of its own accord as he neared the approaching riders. The Sowar saluted and remained stolidly immovable in the background. Both men and horses were caked with dust, and wore a weary, dejected air.

"We're bringing in James all right, sir," answered Billy in response to the colonel's questioning gesture. "But we had a fight—Ghazis, this side Khunaz. Hamerton's badly wounded. I've come on for a doctor; his only chance. The black fellow bolted who was looking after James. Can the doctor go at once, sir? This Sowar wants a fresh horse, that's all."

After a word or two with the commandant the doctor sped toward camp with the Sowar at his heels. He paused for a moment by the side of Billy and looked him in the face.

"I shall be under way in ten minutes," he said. "Look here, old fellow, you've had about enough; go home and turn in." He was struck by the look of agony and mental strain on the boy's face.

After that the colonel got very few words out of him. He saw that the young fellow was done up, and questioned him little. His mouth was parched so that he could with difficulty articulate. His strong young figure was bowed over the horse's neck. As they were nearing camp the doctor with his escort rode out, and called back some cheering words to him. Five minutes later they were out of sight.

Once within camp limits the colonel dismounted, and, giving his horse over to a syce, walked beside the young officer's horse with his hand on his neck. Several fellows came up with greetings and congratulations.

"Come straight to mess and have something to drink before you tell us anything," said the colonel, taking hold of the horse's bridle as he spoke. At the same moment he felt it slacken within his grasp, and looking up he saw that Billy was reeling in his saddle, and that his lips were bloodless.

"I—I think I'm done," he muttered feebly and fell sideways off his horse into the colonel's arms.

They carried him over to the mess and began taking off his military greatcoat. Then something made him open his eyes, and his face took a little brave distorted smile.

"Hold hard!" he gasped. "I think I've got a bullet somewhere, and—and—my arm's smashed."

"Why, damn it!" groaned the colonel, laying him gently down, and looking around upon the circle of horror stricken faces, "he knew this, and he has sent away the doctor!"

It was some weeks before Major Hamerton was able to tell the story of Lieutenant Thompson's heroic conduct; how when he himself was wounded and at the mercy of the murderers the young officer defended him single handed; how afterward he pushed on into Khunaz and brought out James of the police more dead than alive, and how finally, while concealing the fact that he had been shot in the right arm, he rode forty miles in to get the doctor, and thus for the second time saved the major's life.

It was longer still though before Billy was out of danger. The wound had set up inflammation and fever from overexertion and the long time that had of necessity elapsed before skilled care could be bestowed upon it, and for weeks it was feared it would go hard with Billy.

But in the end the "harum-scarum young devil" got well, and the colonel had the pleasure of sending up a "Confidential Report" of a very superior kind, together with a brilliant pendant, which has resulted in the bestowal of the much coveted Victoria Cross upon Lieutenant William Thompson, of Ours.—Vanity Fair.

A Gigantic Wooden Statue.

In the Japanese capital there is a gigantic image of a woman, made of wood and plaster, and dedicated to Hachiman, the god of war. In height it measures 54 feet; the head alone, which is reached by a winding stairway in the interior of the figure, being large enough to comfortably hold twenty persons. The figure holds a huge wooden sword in one hand, the blade of the weapon being 27 feet long, and a ball 12 feet in diameter in the other.

Internally the model is fitted up with extraordinary anatomical arrangement which is supposed to represent the different portions of the brain. A fine view of the country is obtained by looking through one of the eyes of the figure. The admission to all parts of the structure is two cents.

Japanese tradition says that during the time of the Te-Shomeng rebellion, in 1522, hundreds of cords of wood were piled around it and fired, but that the sacred object itself failed to burn or to even be scorched by the flames.—St. Louis Republic.

IF A BODY MEET A BODY

the result is a collision, whether "coming thro' the rye," or not. Life is full of collisions. We are constantly colliding with somebody or something. If it isn't with our neighbors it is with some dread diseases that "knocks us off the track" and perhaps disables us for life. Women especially it seems, have to bear the brunt of more collisions and afflictions than mankind. In all cases of nervousness, bearing down sensations, tenderness, periodical pains, sick headache, congestion, inflammation, or ulceration and all "female weaknesses," Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription comes to the rescue of women as no other medicine does. It is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee, from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money paid for it will be refunded. Building up a Strong, Independent Paper for the People in Oregon?

A PAPER THAT WILL NOT SELL OUT— Printed at the Seat of Government

LOOK AT THE RECORD OF THE CAPITAL JOURNAL.

During the recent session of the legislature it was the only paper in the state that attacked successfully the Portland dictatorship in Oregon politics. It successfully opposed all doctoring the Australian ballot law in the interests of political bosses. It advocated the law (that passed) giving the Oregon railroad commission power to fix just and reasonable rates and power to enforce its decisions. It successfully advocated retention of the railroad commission as best qualified to enforce the law. It labored for all measures to open rivers and thus secure to the people the right to free and unrestricted use of the waterways.

ITS PLATFORM.

THE CAPITAL JOURNAL favors a reform in national finances, to the end that the present expensive monopoly system of supplying an inadequate currency may be supplanted by the government issuing direct to the people an adequate supply of legal tender money, with a coin basis sufficient to conform to sound banking principles. It favors election of all officers who legislate for, or are directly responsible to the people, by direct vote of the people. It favors raising all state revenues by a tax on the gross earnings of corporations, both foreign and state. It favors opening all waterways to the sea and control of all common carriers to the end that the producer shall secure for his labor the largest net returns.

If you favor retaining all powers possible in the hands of the people and government in the interests of the people, circulate this paper. For terms, see elsewhere.
