Four men were then sent He brought out a little store of bright to the apex of the pagoda shaped gold dollars, and gave one to each lad roof and a red roof of apples quickly of the town who was pledged to fight, grew downward from the center and perhaps die, for the Union. Some of the men who received the gift were infinitely touched by it, because they is now well under way and today had always been among those for whom "nobody cared," and for every one to whom it was given the bright dollar evidently brought a ray of sunshine.

Some of the stories connected with the coins will never be known, but a few came back through one mouth and another, causing the giver's heart to rejoice that he had done so kindly a deed. "I punched a hole through mine and and the several sub-committees are wore it on a string around my neck," urged to meet and push their work said one rough fellow, of whom no one This entire project is purely volun- had ever expected to hear good.
