PAVING.—THE JOURNAL originally called attention to the fine smooth gravel streets on the asylum grounds. Those streets are simply constructed. Three rows of drain tile are put down and a well rounded roadbed is covered with six inches of clean gravel. This is simple is it not. But to lay two drain tiles under cement gutters one hundred feet apart will not make a dry street. There should be at least three rows of drain tile on each side of the center to secure a dry gravel street.

SECRET BUSINESS.—There is always a good deal of secret business pending in the justice courts. Of course, the liye reporter gets onto this but is obliged to respect the wishes of the court, while papers are being served, arrests made, or property attached. The private lawsuits between citizens, over differences of accounts, etc., newspapers really have no business with.

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE REGENTS.—Capt. J. T. Apperson, register of the land office at Oregon City, H. E. Hayes, master of the state grange, and Prof. E. B. McElroy, state superintendent of schools, came up on the noon train yesterday and went over to Corvallis to attend the meeting of the board of regents of the state agricultural college. They were joined here by Senator J. K. Weatherford, of this city.—Albany Herald.

BAPTIST CONVENTION.—The state Baptist convention will be held at Albany October 15th. The First Baptist church of Salem has selected the following delegates to represent it in the convention: Dr. and Mrs. S. R. Jessup, (life members), Rev. R. Whitaker, Mrs. I. C. Davis, Mrs. G. C. Litchfield, Geo. N. Sroat, and Dr. F. M. Brooks.

OIL AT HUBBARD.—The parties who were boring for oil at Hubbard in this county, and lost their augur at a depth of three hundred and sixty feet, have begun operations again. They are Pennsylvania oil men and are confident there is oil in Oregon.

NIGHTSCHOOL.—Evening sessions in the different department of the Capital Business College will open on Monday, Oct., 5th provided a sufficient number of students register before the opening to warrant their continuance. Special rates for night school. Persons desiring to enter are requested to call at the college office and register, from 4 to 5, or 7 to 8 o'clock P. M. 10-1-3t

An assessment of 10 cents per capita was levied for general church work in Oregon.

The business meeting consumed the most of the afternoon.

In the evening, after a service of song, the annual sermon was delivered by Rev. C. T. Whittlesey, of Portland, and an address on "A Month in the Holy Land" by Rev. H. V. Rominger, of East Portland.

The session was opened with devotional exercises.

A report of the Congregational college committee was read by Rev. H. A. Shorey and the committee was continued for another year.

A resolution was adopted that the agreement of the trustees of Pacific University be accepted supplying the needful basis of the harmonious co-operation of the churches with the amendment that we recommend to the trustees of the University to place a minimun number of trustees at 15 and also that the newly elected members be representative Congregationalists of Oregon.

Committee on nominations reported the following committee on Y. P. S. C. E. work, to receive information concerning work among Congregation churches: W. H. Morrow, East Portland, C. H. Dye, Oregon City, Mrs. Dr. Barrett, Hood river.

The pastors of the other churches of Albany were invited to seats in the association.

In the evening addresses were delivered by Rev. Chas. Creegan, D. D., secretary American Board of Commissioners for foreign missions, and Rev. Wm. Kincaid, D. D., secretary American Home Miesionary society.

Ammonia and Alum in Baking Powders. How to Detect Them.

In view of what the Minnesota Senate has done, it is hoped that legislative bodies in other states will soon take up the subject of food adulteration. The subjoined list of baking powders containing ammonia and alum, compiled from official reports and published in a recent number of the Scientific American, is given below. "It deals in a direct manner with an evil which must be cut down" said the Chicago Tribune in commenting on the Scientific American report. Following is the list of Ammonia and alum are the most common adulterants used in the manufacture of baking powders. The government report shows that a large percentage of the baking powders on the market contain either one or the other, or both these pernicious drugs.

What woman would use an ammonia or alum baking powder, if she knew it? Such powders not only undermine the health, but ammonia gives to the complexion a sallow or blotched appearance. The presence of ammonia or alum in a baking powder, however, can easily be detected.

TO DETECT AMMONIA.—Mix one heaping teaspoonful of baking powder with one teaspoonful of water in a tin cup; boil thoroughly for a few moments, stir to prevent burning, and if ammonia is present you can smell it in the rising steam. Or, place a can of the suspected powder top down on a hot stove for a minute or two, then take off the cover and smell.

TO DETECT ALUM.—Alum powder can be tested by putting a couple of teaspoonfuls of the powder in a glass of cold water. If no effervescence, that is bubbling or simmering, takes place, condemn the powder and return it at once.

Some alum powders, however, like the "Calumet," "Bon Bon," "Chicago Yeast," etc., contain phosphates in combination with alum, and with these brands the following test is simple and sure:

Take one half teaspoonful of baking powder in lid of say half pound can; char thoroughly over a strong alcohol flame, a good gas jet, or red hot coals. After charing (that is, burning until the whole mass is black) add a teaspoonful of water and place a bright piece of silver coin in the solution. Stir for one minute, then take out the silver. If the powder prove a cream of tartar powder the coin will be bright; if an alum powder it will have sulphur stains.

Now pour a little vinegar into the lid and smell the fumes. Alum powders give off sulphuretted hydrogen, which may be detected by its foul odor.

DYING GUANACOS.

Instinct Makes Them Seek a Common Resting Place for Their Bones.

It is well known that at the southern extremity of Patagonia the guanacos have a dying place—a spot to which all the individuals inhabiting the surrounding plains repair at the approach of death to deposit their bones.

Darwin and Fitzroy first recorded this strange instinct in their personal narratives, and their observations have since been fully confirmed by others.

The best known of the dying or burial places is on the banks of the Santa Cruz and Gallegos rivers, where the river valleys are covered with dense primeval thickets of bushes and trees of stunted growth. There the ground is covered with bones of countless dead generations.

"The animals," says Darwin, "in most cases must have crawled, before dying, beneath and among the bushes."

A strange instinct in a creature so pre eminently social in its habits, a dweller all his life long on the open, barren plateaus and mountain sides.

What a subject for a painter! The gray wilderness of dwarf thorn trees, aged and grotesque and scanty leaved, nourished for a thousand years on the bones that whiten the stony ground at their roots, the interior lit faintly with the rays of the departing sun, chill and gray and silent and motionless—the huanacos' Golgotha.

In the long centuries stretching back into the dim immeasurable past, so many of this race have journeyed hither from the mountains and the plain to suffer the sharp pang of death, that, to the imagination, something of it all seems to have passed into that hushed and mournful nature. And now, once more, the latest pilgrim has come, all his little strength spent in his struggles to penetrate the close thicket, looking old and gaunt and ghostly in the twilight, with long, ragged hair, staring into the gloom out of death dimmed sunken eyes.

To his account of the animal's dying place and instinct Darwin adds:

"I do not at all understand the reason of this, but I may observe that the wounded guanacos at the Santa Cruz invariably walked toward the river."—Longman's Magazine.

The Boy Was Scared.

"The worst frightened man I ever saw," said Judge Fitzgerald, was at Pea Ridge, when we were attacked by the Federal troops. For a body servant I had a strapping big negro boy, whose duty it was to look after my blankets and rations, and negro like he was forever crawling away into some out of the way place to sleep. Just as we were expecting the advance the Federals opened fire on us at rather close range. We were on the skirmish line, and in a moment our men were deployed in battle array. Just as the fire began to grow heavy I heard a piercing yell and saw my negro boy flying along between the lines.

"Every step would have measured fifteen feet, and every time his foot struck the ground he would yell 'O Lord!' loud enough to be heard in both camps. With him he had my blankets and rations, and at every jump he would leave a portion of one or the other in his wake. As far as I could see him he was going like a frightened deer, and long after he was out of sight I could hear him yell. He had been sleeping exactly midway between the lines when the battle opened, and it is not surprising that he was scared. Two weeks elapsed before he returned to camp, but he never could be induced to talk of his Pea Ridge experience."—San Francisco Call.

Two Remarkable Sentences.

The people who sell typewriters and teach their customers how to use them have bothered their brains to evolve practice sentences which will contain all the letters in the alphabet. Here are a couple of ingenious sentences: "Pack my box with five dozen liquor jugs." "Jack quickly extemporized the five tow bags." The first of these sentences is remarkable as containing every letter in the alphabet and only five unnecessary characters. It is curious that not a single consonant is repeated in the sentence. The five unnecessary characters are o, i, e, o, u, all vowels, and all the vowels in the alphabet except a. O is the only letter repeated twice. The second sentence contains twelve unnecessary characters, four vowels and eight consonants.—New York Sun.

The Horse During the Middle Ages.

The importance of the horse during the Middle Ages, especially on the crusades and in the tournaments which followed in the wake of the crusades, is significant. Fully half the glamor and romance that surrounded the knight belonged to the horse, for without the horse those daring deeds in behalf of the weak and suffering had never been done. The horse, however, has had his reward, for the best feature of the Middle Age, outside the church, is closely identified with his name, lasting traces of which are seen in the noble word chivalry.—Caroline K. Sherman in Chicago Herald.

Women and Their Pockets.

There must be some reason why women have so few pockets, and will persist in carrying their money in a dainty little hand pocket, so tempting to sneak thieves. I suppose it is like the wearing of earrings, some habit of our primitive ancestors, when our forefathers bore the burden of the household effects in cares and money, while her liege lord did the fighting.—Philadelphia Press.
