same as above, $375.

But now it is a common practice to discharge servants and let them shift for themselves, even if the time of absence be only a few weeks. Owing to that practice a servant must seek other work at a time when little work is to be had, or must support herself with the little savings that she has put aside, and board REAL ESTATE TRANSFERS FILED with relatives and friends until the close of summer. Every week of idleness cuts into the savings. She has not the kindliest of feelings for the family that discharged her, and she knows that the next family that employs her may act caught cold, which settled on her likewise next year; but she is obliged to work, and she gets the best employment she can under the circumstances. This practice is undoubtedly one of

> to be boiled in order to destroy certain acrid properties, after which it may be fried, roasted, baked, or what not, according to taste. Farmers in Florida have begun to raise these calla roots for market. The plants grow readily in swamps, and so thickly that the yield of a single flooded acre is enormous. They reproduce themselves by the multiplication of their balbs underground, so that the grower has simply to dig up the offshoots and leave the parents to propagate anew. For centuries the Egyptians have cultivated a similar crop during the season of the Nile overflow, and at the present time calla lily buds are a common vege table in Japanese markets. So prolific and palatable are they that their propagation in many parts of the United States where conditions are favorable may reasonably be looked forward to as an agricultural industry of the future .-Portland Oregonian.
