Fortunstely, however, the roofs held together and fell intact upon the ruins of their former supports. The people had cut holes in the thatches and made their way to the hollow space within the gabled part, and were fairly well shettered. The road here was totally impassible, being cracked in every direction, and, as one viewed the scene of desolation it seemed as if the place had been bombarded by modern artillery. As we made our way to Ogaki we experienced a repetition of the same painful scen's -everywhere destruction; everywhere homeless people, with a courage that stamped them Ogaki we followed the track of the main street which ran paralled to a checked with the debris of destroyed houses. Wherever the eye traveled nearly all was a wreck, and the few houses standing and to all appear ance sound when seen from a distance, on a nearer approach we found to be twisted and warped out of their regular form, and their insides completely denuded of ceiling, shop, floors, etc. The temples are in ruins, and the whole place is sinply the abode of desolation. The furnaces have nearly all been destroyed. It is expected, therefore, that a great rise in the price of porcelain will ensue, as the furnaces will not be completed before the end of the year, and the pottery in stock is consequently in great demand. This disaster will very seriously affect the porcelain trade for many months."

STEAMER SAN PEDRO SUNK. VICTORIA, B. C., Nov. 24.-A eries of sharp whistles at about 9:30 alarmed the residents along the ocean beach and brought them out of doors to ascertain the cause. The steamer was running at low speed, out the crash as she piled up on the ledge was beard plainly from land. Boats and men at once went to the assistance of the distressed vessel, which proved to be the large steam collier San Pedro, bound from Comox to San Francisco, with 5000 tons of coal from the Wellington mines. The momentum alone was sufficient to wedge her firmly on the rocks, and the officers decided it would be fatal to the chances of releasing the ship to attempt to move her before morning. It was on Tremont street. A woman, poorly dressed, chanced to espy a pink carnation on the sidewalk. It was near the corner of Winter and Washington streets, which is in a state of blockade the greater part of the day. The dense mass of people was hurrying past as rapidly as possible, but the old woman stood her ground, and, although buffeted and jostled roughly by the crowd, finally succeeded in rescuing the trampled flower and passed on, inhaling its fragrance with an almost eager pleasure. The seamed and wrinkled face was lighted by a gleam that was infinitely more sad than tears.-Boston
