MEETING AN OLD ACQUAINTANCE.

He Had Forgotten His Name and Where They Had Been So Intimate. "I had a peculiar experience the other day," said a friend of mine at the club, "You know I'm a little near-lighted, and I have a very poor memory for faces and voices. I was walking along Washington street about 9 o'clock in the morning on my way to the office, when I was accosted by a well dressed man who called me by name. I couldn't remember him, but I was sure that I had known him somewhere, for his face and voice were both perfectly familiar, but for the life of me I couldn't place him.

"Have you ever been in a similar fix? Well, you know how cheap a man feels and how embarrassed he gets as he tries to talk pleasantly without giving himself away. I would have given $100 to remember my friend's name, and as he rattled on about the weather one indistinct impression chased another through my puzzled brain. No good, though: I had to give it up.

"Well,' I thought, 'I'll hide it from him if I can, but if the worst comes to the worst I'll tell him I've had brain fever and it has affected my memory, and if he'll tell me his name I'll write it down and promise never to forget it to my dying day." "All this time my friend and I kept up a lively conversation, in the course of which he displayed considerable familiarity with my private affairs. He even asked me how that boil on my baby girl's leg was getting on. "Great Casar!' I exclaimed to myself; 'have I lost my mind, and is this my brother or my father?" ". How did you come out on that wheat deal? he inquired with tender solicitude.

"I told him. Yes, I told him all about it. Then he asked me to have a drink and we sat down at a table, and first I drank with him and then he drank with me.

"'Your'e a mighty nice chap,' I thought, addressing my friend. 'What wenderful conversational powers! Funtake you to call on my maiden aunt and perhaps I can get solid with her again through you.' "All this time he was telling me about his wife, who was suffering from the heat a good deal it seemed. Then he remembered that he had an engagement, and said he was sorry, but he'd ment, and said he was sorry, but he'd Dr. W. S. MOTT, physician and surnave to leave me.

A man might ton, with equal emphasis, repeated his travel in the country for 100 years-if he lived long enough-and never see them, so jealously were they guarded by the Moors. Even the emperor of Morocco could not search for them without risking his life.

Why was all this secreey not explained; and the assailant of the legend undertook to prove, by similiar evidence, the existence of a race of dwarfs in Camden town. Dr. Leitner poured oil on the waters by observing that, at any rate, there were a good many of the small races in Africa. For the present the world can wait in patience until more is known of these mysterious little creatures beyond the atlas range. -London Times.

Novelty in a Name.

Mr. Nosmo King Jones is at one of the up town hotels. Mr. Jones accounts for his peculiar name thus: His mother was anxious to give him an uncommon name, and one day before the christening she noticed on the door of a building the name of Nosmo. This struck her fancy. Now for a middle name. Later, coming along by the same building, she saw on the door the name "King." Ah, this was what she was after. "Nosmo King Jones he shall be," she said, and he was christened so. On the way home from the church she passed the same building again. The doors were all shut, and behold, the doors with the names on them she had selected were shut together, and she read, not Nosmo King, but No Smoking, and her heart was broken.-Washington Star.
