So far as insects of the caves are concerned the loss of sight which they gradually undergo is sufficiently well The process of whitening sugar was understood. It would be most interesting to breed these or other blind creatures of the caves in the light, so as to find out if they would get their sight back. In all animals, including man, it is found that nature tries to compensate for loss of vision by increasing the power of the sense of touch. Thus the atennae of cave insects grow remarkably long.

It is very curious to find that nothing in their behavior suggests the fact that they are blind. They walk, run, stop, explore the ground and try to escape from the grasp of the bug hunter just as if they really saw. The light of a candle startles them as much as if they perceived it visually. It is a remarkable fact, proving that the ancestors of these creatures could see, that in the embryo stage of their existence they have eyes well developed.-Washing-

Here, however, is a little anecdote which is very characteristic and amusing. My mother had a great admiration for the "Curiosities of Literature" and was anxious to make the acquaintance of Disraell's father, but there was a difficulty about this, as at the moment he was not on good terms with his father.

However, he appeared one day with his father in tow. As soon as they were both seated, Disraeli turned round and, looking at his father as if he were a plece of ornamental china, said to my mother: "Madam, I have brought you my father. A HELPING HAND

A helping hand we all may give.
If but a pleasant word to say,
And something find each day we live, To belp another on the way.

A helping hand may sow the seed From which the fruits of goodness And to the right may gently lead. The erries from the path of wos.

A helping hand to all markind, . . Among the rich, the poor and low, In every state of life can find An act of kindness to bestow.

A helping band we all may need, When darkest sorrows leave their trace, Some one to comfort and to lead, To give us strength and divine grace.

A belging hand where e'er we go. A ray of sunshine may impart, And but a decil of kindness show A noble and a generous heart.

A helping hand is ever near, In passing through life's troubled tide; When all the world seems cold and dreat, It is a never falling guide.

Why Arctic Waters Are Yellow.

Arctic explorers never tire of telling how beautifully yellow the waters of the northern sea appear. To those who live on the seashore in temperate and tropical countries the stories of travelers concerning the yellow waters of Greenland and Iceland are taken with the proverbial "grain of salt," but scientists have declared that the arctic scientists have declared that the arcus-seas are yellow, and that it was Scores-by who first explained the cause of its
