You know the secred legend old, How, to the fountain's brink, When war across the land had rolled, Great Gideon led his armed fold And bade them stoop and drink.

How all the cantious ones he chose
Who quaffed from palms dipped dow
And putto flight his robber foes
With slaughter fleroe of battled blows
By Jezreei's lofty town. As in the days when Gideon tried
His men to find the true,
From out the mountain's caverned side
The water wells and wanders wide,
And mirrors skics of blue.

The thirsty cattle come and stand Deep in the cooling stream, Wind bended reeds clasp hand with hand, And over all the wheat sown land

And as we quaff the water clear We seem to see a throng appear-The stern array with shield and spear Of Gideon and his men. —Clinton Scollard in Congregationalist.

THE LONE PRISONER.

Mark Twain has written an account of a campaign that failed, and how many, many accounts there have been of campaigns crowned with success. Prisoners from Dry Tortugas, from Andersonville, from a hundred other prisons have written their experiences, but I am sure the most lonesome captive of war times has "written up" no account of his captivity.

Let us go back beyond the season of secession that ushered in the ruddy season of war, to describe a certain happy homestead. It is a home already known to many southern people.
