Booth at Prayer.

Said Squire James, of the probate court, speaking of the late Janius Bru-tus Booth, of which illustrious tragedian the 'squire was an intimate friend: "I heard Booth speak the Lord's Prayer in the Masonle lodgeroom in New York twenty-five years ago, and the effect I have not forgotten yet. There were about 300 members in the hall, and, as the pathetic yet simple words rolled out, the effect of the silions voice of the great tragedian, pether with the marvelous intons tion and noble pathos given to the sublime prayer, made itself felt upon all, and when the 'Amen' was spoken strong men wept. I have never heard the Lord's Prayer since then. I have heard perhaps tifty ministers speak the words, but not like Booth spoke them."

LIGHTHOUSE HUNTING.

The Intermittent Light Serves to the Game to the Hunter. Not only is Saugor Island beacon light of great use to our pilots as they take their charges in and out through the intricate channels leading between the roaring breakers on the sands, but it also serves the purposes of the sports men, employees of the lighthouse and the telegraph office in procuring fresh supplies of good venison when perhaps the stores of provision in their larder have run low, but which they would not so readily get were the light a fixed and necessarily a much dimmer one, instead able are and throws a concentrated beam across the roadstead about every half minute, which is of sufficient brightness to throw the shadow of one's hand against the cabin bulkhead even off in the roads at a distance of two and a half to three miles. Now in the dry season of the year, when all the rain water pools have dried up and the salt water from the sea contaminates all the water of the tidal creeks, the deer, hogs and tigers, with which all these low tying Sunderbund islands abound, get hard pressed for drinking water, and consequently are not slow to discover the whereabouts of the reserve tanks which have been dug in the vicinity of the station.

So the lighthouse people, taking advantage of this fact, do a little shikar after nightfall, and for that purpose have built a small hiding place in the shape of a loopholed mud hut on the eastern edge of the tank, the tank be ing between them and the sea, and the lighthouse being some 400 yards off. The hut is just large enough for two men to stow themselves away in, and the darker the night the better for their purpose. The deer, though naturally timid animals, soon get used to the regular bright flash of the beacon light as the reflectors swing around and around, and with cautious tread they wend their way generally toward the far edge of the tank.

hut are on the alert, and as they observe their prey approach hardly dare draw a breath for fear of the smallest sound alarming them, for the deer have very acute hearing. Their guns are grasped and ready, and their eyes are eagerly watching the deer's cantious advance toward the tank each time the well timed flash lights up the dark bodies. It nears the long coveted draft and stretches forth its neck, but just as its famished lips are dipping into the cool water there is another flash from the light.

Now is the moment for action, and just as the timid creature raises its head to stare at the light two triggers are pulled, and ere the quickly recurring dark period has had time to swing two gun reports have had time to come from the ship at anchor, while the puffs of smoke steal slowly away over light discloses the form of a fine spotted deer stretched lifeless on the grass by the edge of the clear water which had lured it to its fate. Hunting Muskrata at Night. There are three ways by which muskrats are captured-by shooting, by trapping and by spearing. A few may be secured at night by creeping as noiselessly as possible along the creek edges and watching for them to crawl up on the bank to feed. In this they are very dainty. Having secured a favorite root, they approach cautiously the water's edge and dip it in and rub off the mud, dip it in again and again Is just the place to go for a first-class until it is perfectly clean and suited to education. A boat, however, is usually used, as the rats can be more easily and quietly approached on the water. In this case two persons occupy the same boat, the sportsman requiring a pusher. As this sport can only be engaged in at night, the sky must be comparatively clear, in order that the hunter may have the advantage of the moonlight, or, better still, bright starlight. A headlight, with reflector, is, however, sometimes used on the bow of the boat, and this arrangement is frequently quite ouc cessful during the darker nights to one sufficiently well acquainted with the hunting grounds.—Baltimore Sun.

Reckless Economy. As an illustration of reckless economy it may be mentioned that a lady for warded to Siam several parcels declared to contain walking sticks and stationery of the value of £7 10s., but the vigilant eye of the custom house officer promptly detected a brilliant collection of diamonds and jewelry worth upward of £25,000. The case was accordingly reported as contrary to regulation. The postage at the registered letter rate would have amounted to about thirty pounds, and it may be assumed that the course adopted was prompted by the desire to save the difference between the ordinary parcel rate and this amount.-London Tit-
