Occasionally the community of interest which springs up among the tenants of an apartment house is very delightful. In one of those large structures up town lives a gay band of ar ists and musicians under the protecting care of a wise woman, who is the mother of two of thera. Not long ago they decided to hold a musicale. The lady in the opposite apartment was the happy possessor of several very handsome palms, and, with neighborly intent, she offered them to give an added beauty to the rooms on the occasion. The offer was accepted and the floral treasures duly transferred.

About 10 o'clock the morning following the musicale a friend made evening before. Almost her first efaculation was:

"How levely you are here! Such a beautiful apartment, and what lovely palms! Aren't you fortunate!" She had scarcely spoken when a rap sounded at the door, and the servant of the family opposite stepped in, saying:

A Shrewd Tradesman.

Master Hobelmann was a man of no mean capacity, yet to see him busy in his workshop, any day of the week, no one would have suspected the extraordinary business qualities the man possessed.

"Master," his foreman said to him one day, "how is it you are giving away such expensive toolboxes as presents to the children of your wealthy customers? That must cost you a pile of money.'

"Donkey!" The joiner said not another word. But he knew what he was about. In all the houses where the children had received boxes of joiner's tools for their presents, the busy little folk, on the very next day, set about sawing, boring, nailing up and planing all the furniture, until it presented a sorry sight, and Master Hobelmann had to be called in to repair the damages—a costly and tedious process. He made about a hundred per cent. out of those boxes.-- Ulk.

The Inventors of Stoves.

One of the first attempts at making a closed stove of iron was made by Cardinal Polignae in 1709, and seven years later an attempt was made to introduce stoves of this kind into England, but without success. owing to the prejudice of English people in favor of seeing their fire. The Franklin stove was invented by Dr. Franklin in 1745, and a quarter of a century later, in 1771, and during a few years following, the discoverer of electricity invented several other stoves-one of which was invented for burning bituminous coal and which had a downward draft and consumed its own smoke. Count Rumford was the next person to make an invention looking to the improvement of stoves, and during the ten years between 1785 and 1795 devised several improvements. -Philadelphia Press.

Little Originality in Dress. "There is very little originality in the world, after all," declares a well known dressmaker. "We ring the changes on the Louis XV style, the Louis XVI period, the Empire and Medici fashions, and so on without apparently being able of ourselves to inaugurate anything absolutely novel. Of course these epochs are followed with considerable variation and latitude, but it is true, nevertheless, that there is nothing decidedly original novadays.
