

"August Flower"

"I inherit some tendency to Dyspepsia from my mother. I suffered two years in this way; consulted a number of doctors. They did me no good. I then used Relieved in your August Flower and it was just two days when I felt great relief. I soon got so that I could sleep and eat, and I felt that I was well. That was three years ago, and I am still first-class. I am never without a bottle, and if I feel constipated the least particle a dose or two of August Flower does the work. The beauty of the medicine is, that you can stop the use of it without any bad effects on the system. Constipation While I was sick I felt everything it seemed to me a man could feel. I was of all men most miserable. I can say, in conclusion, that I believe August Flower will cure anyone of indigestion, if taken Life of misery with judgment. A. M. Weed, 220 Bellefontaine St., Indianapolis, Ind."

HUMOR

PLAYING A TRUMP.

He Tried Everything Else, but He Was Inevitable. He was a slow coach. Her mother said so; the old man said so; her big brother said so, and scowled darkly when he threatened to call him to account. The reason of all this was that he had long hesitated to pop the question. He and she were sitting in the gloaming. She said: "Alfonso, were you ever engaged?" "Yes," was the sad and unexpected reply. "Yes, indeed, but immediately called and continued: "Did the adored one cruelly break her plighted troth?" "No, I severed my connection"— "Oh, you cruel hearted fiend!" "Yes, the firm I was engaged with heartlessly bonked me."

"Oh, a firm—your employers? and for why, Alfonso?" she said snuggling closer to him on the rustic bench. Alfonso blushed a little nearer off and repeated gloomily: "For mental incapacity."

"Oh, no, say not so, Alfonso," said the girl with the oyster mouth, "you are not ignorant." "Yes I am," said Alfonso, "I'm a lowling idiot."

"Oh, you are keen, young, bright and intellectual. You have a future before you to be shared by some warm and loving heart."

"No, the future is all a blank—blank as my own vacant mind. On the body politic I'm but a wart."

"Think of the happy home you might rear for you and—"

"No, I'm so completely a fool I never could accumulate enough property to put in tea. Financially I'm a total wreck and intellectually busted from away back. Physically I'm nothing but a shell."

FARMING ON WRONG PRINCIPLES.

It's One Thing to Recognize a Mistake, It's Another Thing to Correct It. Miss Busby had a good farm and it was well stocked and conducted by herself in a lucrative manner. Mr. Higgins lived neighbor to her and had a pretty good farm himself. One day he went in and sat down on the porch steps and watched her shelling peas.

"You've got a nice farm here, Miss Busby," he said at random. "I think so," she responded with a touch of pride. "Got fields of truck growin all around?" "Yes."

"Got some good horses and mules?" "Yes."

"Got a comfortable house and a good barn?" "Yes."

"Got a lot of fat chickens and turkeys and geese?" "Yes."

"Got money in the bank?" "Yes."

"Got most everything you need on a farm, haven't you?" "Yes."

Extraordinary Luck.

"I believe there is a good deal of truth in the old adage. It is better to be born lucky than rich," said Mr. B. Henderson. "A guest who has just left seems to be one of those persons who a fortune is bound to protect a few circumstances. The name of the guest is Miss May Merrick, and her unusual luck is shown in a remarkable way. Yesterday when she departed she left behind her a $500 pair of earrings wrapped in a tiny piece of tissue paper. Some hours later I received a telegram asking if they had been found. This is the first time I knew of their having been forgotten. The rooms had been swept out and the earrings went with the dust into a common heap making two or three cartloads."

"A couple of men were set to work to hunt the missing treasure, and the search looked as hopeless as the proverbial hunt for a needle in a stack of hay. The two earrings were at length found, but the stones had got loose and were scattered through a collection of rubbish. Another minute search was made, the stones were found after a couple of hours and the rings were sent to their owner today. That is what I call a case of striking fortune."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Saved by a Burro. Bob Montgomery, with Mr. Sherwood and Mr. Metcalf, left with six burros on a prospecting trip in the foothills around Death valley. They are all old hands at roughing it, but they agree the famous valley is well named. In making the trip from Furnace Creek to Cottonwood a hot wind came up, in which was next to impossible for them to get breath. The animals began to give out, and they were compelled to abandon their packs and start on a hunt for water. What little they had left they mixed with vinegar and oatmeal, but the intense heat soured the oatmeal and made the mixture so hot that it would actually burn them when they wet their swollen tongues with it.

None had ever been on the ground before, and it was only due to the intelligence of Montgomery's pet jack, Sullivan, that they were saved from suffering, if not death. Dragging along up the valley, they were passing the mouth of a canyon, when suddenly old Sullivan gave a tremendous bray. Metcalf said, "That's water, boys!" and started up the canyon. Sure enough, he gave a yell of joy. Water was found.—Great Divide.

The Black Death in England. In England the black death made its first appearance in Dorsetshire, and quickly spreading over the west it reached London by way of Oxford, leaving death and desolation behind it everywhere. It was as fatal in the country as in the town. Whole villages were depopulated and small towns almost wiped out of existence. The dead lay unburied as they had died, for priests had been swept away with their flocks, and in many parishes there was no one left to celebrate mass, while every trade and craft was suspended in the universal terror and suspense.

To add to the horror of the times, bands of marauders roamed about unmolested, robbing alike the dead and the living, and dogs, deprived of their masters by death, came together in packs, made ferocious by hunger, and scoured the country like so many bands of wolves.—All the Year Round.

Prices for Otter Skins. The most valuable otter fur is that of the darkest color. A rich, nearly jet black fur with long silver hairs scattered through is the most prized of all, and such pelts bring the hunter from $150 to $250. The clear black comes next in value, and the brown is the cheapest of all and bring from $75 to $100. These prices do not indicate the true value of the skins, for the locality is a long distance from the railways, and it is very difficult and expensive to get freight of any kind from this out of the way beach. A skin that the hunter sells for $150 more than doubles in value by the time it goes through several hands and reaches a good market.—Cor. San Francisco Chronicle.

Bad Temper Under Water. One of the strange effects that diving has upon those who practice it is the invariable bad temper felt while working at the bottom; and as this irritability passes away as soon as the surface is reached again, it is only reasonable to suppose that it is caused by the unusual pressure of air inside the dress affecting probably the lungs, and through them the brain. My experience has been that while below one may fly into the most violent passion at the merest trifle; for instance, the life line held too tight or too slack, too much air or too little, or some imaginary wrongdoing on the part of the tender or the boys above, will often cause the temper to rise.

I have sometimes become so angry in a similar way that I have given the signal to pull up, with the express intention of knocking the heads off the entire crew; but as the surface was neared and the weight of air decreased, my feelings have gradually undergone a change for the better, until by the time I reached the ladder and had the face glass unscrewed I had forgotten for what I came up.—H. P. Whitmarsh in Century.

He Had Some Feeling. One Billie, a ten-year-old not 1,000 miles from Detroit, is about the worst youngster on record, and, strange to say, his fond mother doesn't seem to know it half as well as the neighbors do. Not long ago she opened out on a man who spoke his mind very freely to William. "Did you tell my son to go to the bad place?" she asked, with a flush in her eye. "No, ma'am, I didn't," was the prompt contradiction. "Did you say he would go there some time?" she continued. "No, ma'am, I didn't," and the man became hot. "I suppose he told you I did, but it isn't true. I haven't much respect for the bad place, ma'am, nor never had, but I've got enough sympathy for it not to wish it any such bad luck as that."

Then he got around the corner quick.—Detroit Free Press.

An Argument Against Ether. When anesthetics were first discovered it was urged by those who had learned to admire the dexterity of surgical art that the days of that art were doomed, that surgeons would become mere "puffers," and that a false sentiment and fear about pain and the infliction of pain would take from the Esculapian fraternity the boldest and manliest qualities. No more heroes of surgery would now be born.—Dr. Richardson in Longman's Magazine.

THEATICAL NUISANCES.

But as There Is No Way of Suppressing Them They Must Be Endured. The highly reprehensible habit of coming into the theater after the curtain is up and disturbing the entire audience in getting properly seated is growing in New York. This is bad. The other and more flagrant violation of individual rights—getting up and hurrying for the doors before the curtain goes down on the last tableau—is also growing. This is worse.

There may be and very often are sufficient reasons for some people being late. I can't help but think, however, if there were stringent rules enforced prohibiting any one going or being shown to a seat while the curtain is up there would be a great falling off of this nightly nuisance. The discretion of ushers, properly exercised, is often commendable, but a well known rule enforced by the police, if necessary, would work advantageously all around, for those who come late would know before hand that they must stand until the close of the first act.

As for the person who begins to shuffle into his or her wraps during the most telling lines of the piece and noisily bolts for the exits in the middle of the grand denouement, nothing but a club seems adequate. This because the annoyance is so great and because there is no reasonable excuse for it. I have seen men and women who have the outward appearance of gentlemen and ladies get up thus and stampede as if there were a fire, and have found them loading in the lobby until the lights were turned out on them.

The desire to get out first is apparently one of those curious freaks of human nature that impels men to jump from the moving train and off the ferryboat before it gets to the dock, and women to run across tracks in front of the horse cars—not because they are in any special hurry, but merely to "get there, Eli."

The effect upon the great majority of playgoers is to spoil their full appreciation if not destroy their understanding of the piece. This matter is so palpably outside the bounds of good sense and the most ordinary exercise of the reasoning faculties that a remedy is not to be readily suggested. Nothing short of a Bowery "bouncer" posted in each aisle with a club would seem to reach the case.—New York Herald.
