THE CAPITAL JOURNAL

HOFER BROTHERS, - - - Editors.

PUBLISHED DAILY, EXCEPT SUNDAY, BY THE Capital Journal Publishing Company.

(Incorporated.) Office, Commercial Street, in P. O. Building Entered at the postoffice at Salem, Or., as second-class matter.

CATCH THEM EITHER WAY.

Nothing has been alleged against Mr. Harding or Mr. Egan, except that when the canvassers were at Gervais, beer and whisky was free for Harding and Egan men. Mr. Egan never drank a drop of liquor over a bar in his life. Mr. Harding has not drunk a drop of intoxicating beverages for over eight years. It may be that some of Egan's and Harding's friends treated at Gervais, but Messrs. Harding and Egan knew nothing of it, nor did they furnish or promise any money to pay for it. As a matter of fact, Mr. Harding was at home sick in bed and is not yet able to sit up all day. There is probably not a candidate in the field who has not some friend that has "set 'em up" in his interest. It is not the candidates fault, unless he has directly or indirectly authorized it. This neither Harding or Egan has done. This contemptible attempt to prejudice the Prohibitionists against these men is worthy only of men who hushwhack in politics—Woodburn Independent.

The JOURNAL reprints the above to show how the Democratic managers are seeking to catch the voter either way, coming or going. If the Democrats put up a total abstinence man they praise him to the skies for it and say to the people: "We are a moral party; our candidates are cold water men—no bummers for us, if you please." And they swell themselves up with moral considerations. If the Republicans put up a total abstinence man the case is different. He is at once referred to by the Democratic prompters as a fanatic, a cold water apostle, a priest ridden fool—no church and state for us; we believe men should be able to drink or let it alone—(that is Republicans.) It makes all the difference in the world whose candidate it is. "If Harding and Egan are Democrats it is a virtue not to drink. If they were Republicans they would be cranks."

That is the Democratic argument, presented in the above.

It is a narrow and intolerant argument to claim that neither Egan nor Harding have put up nor promised a cent for treating, but admit that some of their many friends have treated. It is hypocrisy which men of sense will repudiate, whether they be drinkers or not. To claim for those candidates the virtue of total abstinence, and at the same time reap the benefits of other men's weakness, developed by money which their "friends may have used, is so thin that the contempt of voters should snow them under at the polls.

East Oregonian: "THE JOURNAL is right. The people should support men who are best fitted for the office rather than men who are simply partisans, possessing no other virtue."

The women ought to have a prominent part in the Fourth of July celebration this year. Didn't Queen Isabella pawn her crown jewels to raise the wind for Columbus to discover America.

Has anyone stopped to think what church work, society work, schools, Memorial Day and all such occasions would amount to with the women left out? There is a theme for some gallant young Fourth of July orator.

No citizen need hesitate about going to the polls to vote the Kangaroo ballot. Instead of having election workers pulling him about hither and thither he will be quietly furnished an official ballot and be left alone to fix it as he wants it.

The suspected Pan-Slavist Embassy Herr Von Wesseltzky-Bojod-aravitch has been ordered out of Prussia by the Kaiser. People who love short names and hate titles will applaud the Kaiser for asking him to leave.

Athena Press: "The tariff is but one of the questions before the American people and on that plank alone, is the Democratic party in this state, and in most of the others, committed. The people are not making the campaign upon merely one question. The railroad and the finance questions are of as great, if not greater magnitude. There are a series of unjust pieces of legislation. The fight is not against any particular one more than another. If the tariff was the only and all important question to solve, it could be easily done."

The shoddy American aristocracy has complete possession at Washington. Here is an extract from a Washington letter.

"Life in the American capital is becoming oppressively conventional. Every one acts, looks and dresses like every one else. In all the town there is now no such thing as a character who stands out unique and picturesque above the others. Year after year life in Washington has been approaching nearer and nearer the strictly conventional, and at last it appears to have reached the dead level of the commonplace. No public man now wears a costume not in accord with what is known as good form. Even the new congressmen from the small districts have their evening suits, to the last man of them, and not one is good enough to break the monotony by wearing it in the home or at an afternoon reception."

The June number of "Romance" contains sixteen original and selected stories of remarkably high and even merit—stories of America, England, France, Spain, Russia, India and the high seas. The balance between grave and gay, the wild and the reasonable, is admirably maintained. One sheds a tear over Alphonse Daudet's "Last Class," or Lydia Paschkoff's touching "Martha;" laughs over the wit of Victorian Sardou and Madame Bazan; shudders over Guy de Maupassant's terrible description of "Fear"; and hastens through "The Thief in the Grange," "Running Down a Slave Ship," and others like them, in order to reach the solution of their clever mysteries. Of especial interest is the production, for the first time in English in this country, of "The Song of the Swan," by Georges Ohnet. This distinguished Frenchman, whose popularity in his own nation is phenomenal, is too little known in America. This magazine is issued by Romance Publishing Company, Clinton Hall, Astor Place, New York. The price is 25 cents a copy; subscriptions, $2.50 a year.

One number of the most interesting papers in GOOD HOUSEKEEPING for June is that in which a writer, who modestly conceals her full name, gives an interesting picture of her home in the wilderness of Washington, far in the Northwest. The culinary department is especially favored in this issue, there being a large number of valuable articles; though other interests of the home are by no means forgotten or overlooked. This journal is one of the most desirable guides for the conduct of the family; the experienced housekeeper will not, and others should not, think of doing without it. Clark W. Hyman & Co., Springfield Mass.

PLATT FOR BLAINE.

Straws That Show Which Way the Wind Blows.

POLITICAL TALK.

Ex-Senator Platt's Opinion of President Harrison.

New York, June 2.—Ex-Senator Thomas C. Platt, whose opposition to President Harrison's nomination is no secret, when seen yesterday regarding the interview with the president in which Mr. Harrison was reported as saying that he did not believe "individual disappointment" would control the action of the convention at Minneapolis, said: "The remarks about 'individual disappointment' indicate how thoroughly the president misapprehends the nature of the opposition to his candidacy, and how wise is the American system of frequent changes in the personnel of the government.

"It is astonishing how quickly and how easily in the process by which a man comes to look upon the office he holds as his private property. He becomes accustomed to the homage which follows in its train, and regards it as little less than impious to suggest that he had better make way for another. The president cannot understand how a man can be a good citizen without offering a prayer night and day for the re-election of Benjamin Harrison. He does not conceive it to be morally possible for any one to oppose him, except from bad, selfish and revengeful motives.

"Now, I am what our mugwump friends delight to stigmatize as an unpractical politician. I look at things as they really are. The president says in this interview that he has acted conscientiously in the discharge of his public duties. It is far from me to question that. I am more than willing to subscribe to really enthusiastic praise of his administration. It certainly has done great things, but the president should not assume that he is the only man, who since 1880, has contributed its achievements. He is only one of many statesmen who conjointly labored to the country's honor and advantage. Blaine gave us the last attractive feature to our policy—the magnificent scheme of reciprocity, which has saved to the people $80,000,000 of taxation here, and on their exports half as much more in the foreign countries where they are sent. He has extended our foreign trade not less than $75,000,000 and promises soon to do vastly more than that. Now, if I remember rightly, when Blaine sent to the president his pan-American report, proposing reciprocity, Mr. Harrison forwarded it to congress with something like a sneer. He said in his message to congress: "It will certainly be time enough for us to consider whether we must cheapen the cost of our production by cheapening labor in order to gain access to South American markets when we have fairly tried the effect of established and reliable steam communication and of convenient methods of money exchange." Then he went on to say that with these advantages we could easily compete in South America anyhow. In other words, he threw cold water on reciprocity. Later, when Blaine's public letters demonstrated that the people were with him and his great policy, and when congress put it into law and Brazil gave Blaine a treaty, the president went stammering through the South saying very much about the glories of reciprocity and very little about the statesman who contrived it.

"Reciprocity is the brightest jewel in the crown of this administration; but whose jewel is it? This administration settled the Samoan difficulty with Germany. That was a particularly ugly and delicate affair and undoubtedly great credit is due to the Republican government which adjusted it so promptly, so neatly and so advantageously.
