"August Flower"

Perhaps you do not believe these statements concerning Green's August Flower. Well, we can't make you. We can't force conviction into your head or medicine into your throat. We don't want to. The money is yours, and the misery is yours; and until you are willing to believe, and spend the one for the relief of the other, they will stay so. John H. Foster, 1122 Brown Street, Philadelphia, says: "My wife is a little Scotch woman, thirty years of age and of a naturally delicate disposition. For five or six years past she has been suffering from Dyspepsia. She became so bad at last that she could not sit down to a meal but she had to vomit it as soon as she had eaten it. Two bottles of your August Flower have cured her, after many doctors failed. She can now eat anything, and enjoy it; and as for Dyspepsia, she does not know that she ever had it."

The Circus Manager and the Jockey.

Old Renz had a decided objection to performers with heavy beards. His aversion did not extend to a slight mustache, but one day when a newly engaged English jockey came on the scene "bearded like the pard," he seemed not particularly pleased. An elderly member of the troop suggested that the new comer should at least get rid of his "sideboards," but the son of Albion gave a decided "No!" and his debut turned out a partial failure.

"Much too heavy for a jockey!" curtly remarked the manager.

"Then what am I to do?" piteously inquired the new hand.

"Go in for a shave!"—Anekdotenjaeger.

A Wise Saying.

Mr. Wednot (a confirmed bachelor)—How time does fly, Miss Toolate. It's just ten years ago since you refused me on this very spot.

Miss Toolate (who wishes she hadn't)—Yes, Mr. Wednot; but I was very young and foolish then.

Mr. Wednot—But we are both older and wiser now.—Jester.

Truth Is Stranger Than Fiction.

George Washington Lee, lazily lounging over his late breakfast, with his wife attired in a rich morning wrapper sitting opposite, constituted an ideal picture of elegant ease and comfort.

"George," she said as her hand, glittering with diamonds, toyed with the gold enameled crown of the coffee urn, "may I ask a small favor?"

"Certainly, my dear," he responded gallantly, "what is it?"

"I want a thousand dollars."

George's hand went to his vest pocket and he carelessly tossed the bill over to her.

"Thank you, dear," she said, sweetly. "And, George, I want a new pair of diamond earnings. Those I have are too small to match the necklace you gave me last week."

"Very well, love, I'll stop at the jeweler's as I go down town and have him send them up."

"And, George, dear, I want at least five pretty, light silk dresses to wear at the seaside this summer."

"I don't see why you shouldn't have an even half dozen, darling. Go down and select what you please."

"How good of you, George," she said tenderly. "And George, can't I have a cart with russet harness and a sorrel horse? I'm tired of the phaeton?"

"Excuse me, dear, I might have known that. You've had that phaeton now almost three months. By all means get the cart," and George lazily broke another egg.

"And that cottage in the Adirondacks, George," she ventured, "shall I tell the agent we will take it at the price he gave?"

"Certainly, dear, it will be such a pleasure to you."

"Oh, George," she twittered, "how awfully lovely you are and how glad I am that I am your own little wifey."

And well she might be glad that she was the wifey of a man so lavish in his gifts, so prodigal in his generosity, for George Washington Lee was a Pullman car porter, and the rich and mighty of the nation paid tribute to him.—Detroit Free Press.

Then and Now.

Jones (in the honeymoon)—I cannot imagine, wifey, what is the matter with my razor. It has an edge on it like a saw.

Mrs. Jones (timidly)—Oh, darling, can you forgive me? I cut off some hooks and eyes from an old waist with that razor, but it wasn't real sharp then.

Jones (quietly)—Dearest, you must be careful. You might happen to cut off one of your pretty little fingers.

Ten Years Later: Jones (crossly)—Some infernal idiot has been tampering with my razor.

Mrs. Jones (icily)—It must have been yourself, then, as no one ever touches it but you.—Exchange.

Proof Positive.

Young Mr. Risling (who has risen from the ranks)—Your family is a very old one, is it not, Miss Wayback?

Miss Wayback—It is, indeed, Mr. Risling. We can trace our ancestry back to the Normans, and none of our family was ever engaged in trade.

Mr. Risling—So your brother said yesterday when he borrowed ten dollars of me.—Brooklyn Life.

A Commencement Item.

"Well, John and Laura will graduate soon."

"Have they learned anything?"

"You bet. John can umpire a game without gittin licked, and Laura's 'way ahead of her class in croquet!"—Atlanta Constitution.

A Leading Question.

"Yaas," said Cholly Chuggins, "I believe in a man's having one idea in life, you know."

"Do you, really," rejoined Miss Belle Pepperton. "And when do you expect to have yours?"—Washington Star.

Question of Finance.

Hobbs—I suppose you will pass the summer with your fiancee at the seashore, won't you?

Dobbs—I shall if I can marry her at the end of the first week.—Life.

A ROYAL PORK BUTCHER.

A King Whose Sole Ambition Was to Make Delectable Sausages.

Charles VI. king of Spain and the Indies, had a brother named Don Antonio, who excelled as an amateur sausage maker, and after awhile nothing would please the king but that he, too, should be initiated into the secrets of the wonderful art. He hoped ultimately, he said, to produce sausages which should rival, nay, even excel, his brother's. Accordingly a pavilion was built in a secluded part of Aranjuez, whither, liberally supplied with choppers, pigs and the necessary spices, the monarch retired from public view and, dressed in a butcher's white blouse and apron, went through a severe course of training.

At last he was ready for a test, and a piece of sausage solemly tasted by Don Antonio, was declared worthy of his own making. The dish became fashionable at court, but Charles, insisting that he had not yet acquired his brother's delicacy and finish, continued his labors toward the perfection of his culinary skill. One day the king, at table, began to find fault with his sausages.

Naturally the courtiers all demurred at this and declared that he was mistaken, but a young duke who had just come up from the country, and did not know how matters stood, thought he saw an open road to favor, and remarked, "I venture to agree with your majesty." "What would you do with the cook?" asked Charles. "Expel him," was the reply. On this Charles rose from his seat, left the hall and quickly returned, dressed in his professional costume.

Approaching the bewildered young man, he said, "Sir duke, will you beg my pardon of the king?" "Mercy, sire!" cried the duke, throwing himself on his knees. Charles good humoredly passed over the offense, and made the culprit one of his personal attendants.

This whim degenerated into sheer monomania; matters of the gravest importance were neglected; the king could not be got away from his self inflicted labors; sausage making became the sole interest of his existence. In the end, however, he was undeceived by a fortunate occurrence. An English lady of rank, who was very curious to see the royal pork butcher at work, was secretly introduced by the British embassador into the grounds surrounding the pavilion. By some mischance Charles discovered her, and thinking it the best thing to do went up to her and embraced her, forgetting that his hands and clothes were all smeared and dirty.

Of course the lady's dress was spoiled, but Charles had recognized how utterly absurd he must seem to other people, and his eyes being thus opened he at once desisted from his degrading occupation. Nevertheless, during his absence from business, feeble prince as he was, incalculable damage had been done to the empire—damage from which it never recovered under his after rule.—Massachusetts Times.

The Lady of the House.

In these latter days we are rightfully weary of the influx of ladies among us—the lady in the kitchen, the wash lady, the cleaning lady, the saleslady, ad infinitum. But we must never put aside nor allow any other to supplant the grand title of the lady of the house. That Anglo-Saxon word which holds in it "the vision of the ideal of the true lady, the noble woman ruling well her household, the woman of wisdom to learn and teach the laws which order bread-keeping, the mistress of domestic economy—the science of establishing in every house the house law of thrift and comfort."

Words are indeed "monumental thoughts," and there are few in our tongue which stand out more clear cut and strong, showing us what true and noble reality as well as ideality lies within compass of her who is the lady of the house.—Harper's Bazar.

Spurgeon Suffering from Gout.

Rev. Newman Hall narrates that he once saw Mr. Spurgeon lying on a couch and twitching in great pain from gout. He said: "Some of our friends think themselves perfect saints. We all thought a certain brother perfect till he said he was. Most of these are old maids or retired officers with few cares." (Another twitch of pain.) "If they had gout and the bell was not answered quickly, they would find some of the old devil left in them." He asked Dr. Hall to pray with him, saying: "I know you can be short. A dear brother was praying with me one day at such length that I had to say, 'Stop, stop! I can't bear any more.'"—Good Words.

How Silk Is "Watered."

The satin weave throws the fine warp threads all upon the right side. Twills have the warp in three sheets, whereof one is drawn down and the other two left on the top. Watered silk is made by passing the fabric, double, between hot rollers under pressure.—Chicago Tribune.

Offerings to the River God.

Lamps filled with cocoanut oil were formerly set afloat on the Ganges as an offering for those at sea. If they sank immediately it was ominous, but it was a good sign if they floated until out of sight.—Washington Star.

IT WORKED.

The Young Men Knew Rums... Nature and They Concocted a Scheme.

The delegation of young men had been shown into the reception room at their employer's residence, and when his wife entered, all rose awkwardly and seemed ill at ease.

"We are employed at your husband's office," explained one of them at length.

"Indeed!" she said in some surprise. "I am very glad to see you; but to what am I indebted for this call?"

"Well," said the spokesman, plucking up a little courage, "you see, it's just this way: We've been getting off at 3 o'clock Saturdays and now we want to make it 12 or 1 o'clock if we can."

"The ball grounds are quite a distance away," put in one of the delegation.

"And we have to start early to get to the races," added another.

"Really, you must excuse me," said the mistress of the house courteously, but firmly. "I never interfere in my husband's business affairs."

"Oh, we don't want you to," protested two or three together.

"You see," said the spokesman, getting down to business again, "it's just this way: We want you to be kind of nice and pleasant to him for a few days, and then we'll go to him and ask him to"——

"Gentlemen!" she haughtily exclaimed.

"Might ask him to take you to the ball game," suggested one of the young men without noticing her manner.

"Or the races," added another.

"There is an inference, gentlemen," she began, but the spokesman interrupted.

"Oh, I know all about it," he said, "I'm married myself. Things go wrong in the house, and you're tired and cross at breakfast. Then we suffer at the office. You stay up late to chaperon your daughter at a ball, and we have more trouble at the office. You're a bit cross three mornings in succession, for one reason or another, and we have a—a—terrible time at the office."

"I was discharged from an office once because my wife was cross the same morning that the boss' was," exclaimed one young man. "I suppose our wives would have chatted pleasantly if they had met, but there was an explosion when we met. He was ugly about something, and I fired back, and he 'fired' me. That's the way it goes now; if you make it a point to be particularly agreeable and pleasant to him for—say four days"——

"Yes, four days will do nicely," broke in the spokesman. "Then we'll go to him, and everything will be all right. The fourth day you give him the best breakfast you can—everything that he likes best—and we'll get what we want in three minutes. Talk about a woman having no influence in business! Why, the humor she's in has more effect than a bank failure or a boom in trade."

She thought she ought to be angry, but instead she laughed, agreed to the proposition, and four days later when they waited on the head of the firm he made the closing hour 12 o'clock, and said that never in the history of the firm had things run as satisfactorily as they had during the last four days.—New York Sun.

The Horse Power of a Whale.

The horse power of a whale has been made a subject of study by the eminent anatomist, Sir William Turner, of the University of Edinburgh, Scotland, in conjunction with the equally eminent Glasgow shipbuilder, John Henderson. The size and dimensions of a great finner stranded several years ago on the shore at Longriddy furnished the necessary data for a computation of the power necessary to propel it at a speed of twelve miles an hour. This whale measured eighty feet in length, twenty feet across at the flanges of the tail, and weighed seventy-four tons. To attain a speed of twelve miles per hour it was calculated that 145 horse power was necessary.—San Francisco Call.

Never Punish When Angry.

There are no unfailing rules which can be given to the incipient teacher, and no patent methods will avail. All depends upon the circumstances at the very time when she has to act, and those her instructors cannot by any possibility know. The only rule without exception that occurs to me is that she should never punish when she is angry; but this would be a very slender stock to go into business with, and the imparting of it would hardly justify a legislature in building normal schools.—Anna C. Brackett in Harper's.

Making Sure.

He (earnestly)—Are you sure, absolutely sure, that you will love me till death do us part?

She (solemnly)—I am sure, absolutely sure, that I shall love you till death do us part. By the way, is your life insured?—New York Weekly.
