a Man Who Was Not Such Foot as He Looked. A tall, slim fellow, with a vacant stare, walked into the police station of a lady blushing, as she playfully with-duty and said in a hollow voice: "Sir, I have an important communication to make, I am dead, I was murdered, and I entreat you to find the murderer and have me buried."

The official involuntarily started back; it was evident he had a lunatic before him. He rang a bell, and the captain of the division, the police surgeon and all the constables obeyed the summons. In a moment the room was packed with a crowd of persons, all anxiously looking toward the surgeon, who in such cases has the first word.

"Just so," the latter said, addressing the stranger: "I could tell at the first glance that you were dead. Do you happen to remember your name?"

"Certainly," the maniac replied; "my name is Berthold Schwarz."

"And your address?" "The grave." "Who is your murderer?"

"Columbus."

"The same who discovered America?" "Yes." "Then allow me to congratulate you

We have captured the smart chap. Come, and I will show you his cell." "Directly," said the madm in reply to the surgeon's diplomatic little speech, and began fumbling in his pecket, from which he quickly produced a thick packet of neatly bound almanacs.

"Gentlemen, when I was alive I used to sell these almanacs; they are the best sold in this country and only cost threepence apiece. You will admit that these handsome little volumes ought not to be left to molder in the grave, and, as we appear to be on such friendly terms, perhaps the gentlemen will not object to buy the lot."

Superstition at Mente Carlo. The air of Monte Carlo is in truth alive with superstition; we breathe. it, eat, drink and even sleep it, for our very dreams inspire us with the idea of a number. The most common sense individual can no more escape the infection of superstition than he can hope to leave the principality without having caught the fever of gambling. Unimportant events and trivial incidents are fraught with meaning to the roulette loving man or woman, who see in every combination of persons or things a possible revelation of a lucky Friends, relations, acquaintances become as foes in the atmosphere of the rooms, for the gambler dreads to be looked at or spoken to in the fear that it may break his luck. Every kind of odd, fanciful or commonplace charm is invested with awe and reverence by the infected person, who would rather lose his note for 1,000 francs than the silver penny which he regards for the time being as a power to influence his good fortune.-Cor. Philadelphia Telegraph.

Superstition in New England. During pedestrian tours in New England, in various parts of the west and in every southern state I have frequently staid for the night at the houses of poor farmers, laborers, fishermen and trappers. In such journeys I have invariably listened to the tales of the neighborhood, stimulating them by suggestion, and have found the belief in witchcraft cropping out in the oldest towns in New England, sometimes within the very shadow of the buildings where a learned ministry has existed from the settlement of the country and public schools have furnished means of education to all classes. The horseshoes seen in nearly every county and often in every township upon the houses of persons suggested the old horseshoe beneath which Lord Nelson, who had long kept it nailed to the mast of the Victory, received his death wound at Trafalgar.-Dr. Buckley in Century.

A Prehistoric Pot. A poison pot belonging to prehistoric Indians has been dug up near Reading. The pot is a large flat stone, with a circular pit in the center an inch deep and two inches in diameter, bearing unmistakable evidence of having been carved out laboriously with a sharp flint instrument. It still shows plain traces of the poisons and acids which were mixed in it and Kansas City, used in the poisoning of arrows. The poisons extracted from the sacs of copperheads and rattlesnakes and from certain deadly plants were used in concocting the baneful fluids. The poisoned arrows were employed by the Indians in killing their enemies in war and in shooting dangerous wild animals. Few poison pots of this kind are in existence, even in the most complete museum collections of Indian relics.—Philadelphia Ledger.

An Archbishop's Swear. What is an archbishop's swear? W H. HULBURT, Asst, Gen!. Pass. Agt This curious piece of information ame out by accident the other night during one of Dr. Benson's speeches in Whitechapel. He was speaking without notes, and at one particular passage waxed indignantly eloquent at the idea that such work as Mr. Barnett was doing was not good and useful work. Suddenly two words slipped out. The archbishop colored with confusion and apologized profusely for his inadvertence. We hasten to add that they were hardly what would ordinarily pass as very wicked words. The archbishop's swear was only "My goodness."-
