Little Charles Lee Burdon, the twentyfive-months-old grandson of Lee Burdon, is being petted and caressed by the citizens of Elmwood, both as a musical prodigy and more particularly in recognition of his wonderful presence of mind and courage in the presence of death by drowning which he displayed under the most trying circumstances even to one of maturer years.

Charley was visiting Grandpa Burdon with sympathy, "be it far from me to in Greenwich street, and, clad in an uladd to the desolation and misery of an star and tight fitting bonnet, was playing ster and tight fitting bonnet, was playing in the yard, accompanied by his grandmother. There is a cistern in the yard, 10 feet in depth, about 8 feet in circumference and containing 7 fest of water. It is supplied with an iron cover, and precautions had been taken to have it securely fastened. Charley decided to make an investigation.

His grandmother left him for an intant, and the child in some unexplainble manner either succeeded in tilting the cover by partly raising it, or else as e stepped on the edge it was raised sufficiently to make an opening through | put into practice. which the adventurous infant was precipitated. The grandmother returned to the spot where she had left him, but the hardest bodies. he had disappeared. She called out to him, but no response was heard. She made a circuit of the grounds, but no trace of the boy was discernible. pily she thought of the cistern, and see ing that the cover was bottom side up she removed it from the opening and was terrified to discover Charley floating on the surface of the water. He had probably fallen into the cistern feet foremost and his clothing had buoyed him up so that he was able to float temporarily. The frantic grandparent called to him.

and he responded bravely. She be-sought him to raise his head a little, and then called out to the gardener to come to the rescue. Peter hastened to the spot, and in his perplexity could not devise an immediate plan of action. Mrs. Burdon realized the dire peril of the situation, and seeing a small pitch-fork near by she seized it, and with Peter's assistance made a desperate effort to fasten it into the infant's clothing. The cistern was dark, and it was with extreme difficulty that the exact location of the child could be discerned. All the while the grandmother was urging Charley to keep up courage and uttering words of loving solicitude, and the little fellow responded with lisping assurances. Finally the handle of the pitchfork was thrust within reaching distance and Charley was bidden to cling fast to it. He is a vigorous, well developed boy, and he quickly clasped his hands around the staff and clung to it with dogged determination.

Slowly and steadily the weight wa lifted to the surface of the cistern, and the wet and dripping figure was clasped in the arms of his deliverers. Charley was cool and self possessed, and was quickly taken into the house and supplied with an outfit of dry clothing, and hot drink was administered to him. He lisped that he was pretty wet, but that he was a smart boy because he swimmed in the water.-Providence Journal.

I was alcrowd against the gates at the top of ways quick, and as I ran through the streets I flung the papers in the yards. After I got back the other editor, who owned the paper, used to say: "See here! Mr. Brown, Miss Jones, Mrs. Peters and the baker all say they got no papers, and I had to give them each a Then I used to say:

"Why did you do that? Brown's paper is sticking up in his grape trellis. Miss Jones' paper fell under her front stoop. Mrs. Peters' lighted on top of her side porch, and the baker's paper popped through a hole in his cellar window.
