SELECTIONS

WHAT TO EAT IN HOT WEATHER.

An English Physician Speaks of Fluids and Plenty of Fruit.

If a man earn his living by the sweat of his brain he must, if he wishes to live long, maintain his health by the sweat of his brow—that is, he must in some form or other take muscular exercise. The diet laid down as suitable for summer would in that case of course almost universally apply.

The most suitable articles for hot weather are fish, such kinds of meat as fowls and game, green vegetables, salads and fruit. Farinaceous food—that is, starches—should be taken in the very smallest quantity only. Sufficient sugar would be found in the different fruits that the season of the year produces, and therefore should not be supplemented. In the case of a man of ordinary size, doing ordinary physical or mental work, the following would represent an ordinary day's food for hot weather as far as quantity and constituents are concerned:

Breakfast—Two cups of tea or coffee, sweetened with saccharine, one or two teaspoonfuls of cream in each, one ounce of dry toast, thinly buttered; four ounces of grilled or boiled fish, such as plaice, sole, whiting, haddock, cod or trout, or four ounces of cold chicken, cold tongue or grilled steak or chop.

Lunch—Two or three ounces of cold mutton, beef or lamb; three or four ounces of green vegetables plainly boiled; plenty of green salad, made with vinegar, but without oil; four or five ounces of stewed fruit; water, or two or three glasses of pure dry Moselle or other Rhine wines.

Afternoon tea, if desired—Two cups of tea, as at breakfast, nothing to eat.

Dinner—Julienne, or clear vegetable soup; three or four ounces of fish; three or four ounces of any red meat, or chicken, rabbit, game or venison; six ounces of any green vegetable, with gravy from the meat only; four ounces of stewed fruit or of raw fruit; a little stale or pulled bread and a small piece of cheese.

This diet may be varied as to hour, but three meals only should be eaten daily, and only sufficient at each meal to satisfy the appetite.

Fruit may, however, be taken at proper times, and, although it is much more popular now as a food than it used to be, it is only beneficial in moderate quantity. More fluid is, of course, necessary in hot weather than in cold, and so long as it is a harmless fluid Dr. Nokes questions whether too much can be taken. Fluid in this way is to the kidneys what fresh air is to the lungs, and the waste of meat not used in the system is carried off by its aid. A meat diet is healthy and life prolonging if supplemented with plenty of fluid to carry off its waste. That fluid should be taken in large quantities in the summer is a wise provision of nature, as the skin carries off a large amount of waste from the system, and therefore its activity should be stimulated in every way, and it is most desirable by frequent baths to keep the pores open. In the summer acidulated drinks are the most grateful to the palate. There can be no doubt that the most refreshing beverage in summer, and certainly the most harmless, is the properly made cup of tea.

In every well appointed household dinner is the most important meal of the day, but a fashion in regard to this has lately crept into use which is neither physiologically correct nor conducive to its enjoyment.

I refer to the custom now prevalent of commencing dinner with some anchovy toast, caviare, or sardines on bread and butter, or some other savory of a like nature. The proper commencement of dinner should be the old fashioned dish of good soup—and for this reason that it is necessary that the first food taken at dinner should be quickly absorbed, so as to stimulate the nervous system and give tone to the stomach. In this way the appetite is stimulated and the sense of taste made more keen. Nothing acts so beneficially for this purpose as a small quantity of good soup. The more important adjuncts are, of course, pleasant surroundings and cheerful companionship.—Dr. Nokes in Gentleman's Magazine.

Electric Oxford.

Oxford having taken unto herself a tramway, and survived what many of her inhabitants regarded as an act of the direst profanation, is about to give further proofs of her readiness to move with the times by the adoption of the electric light in her thoroughfares and public buildings. The compactness of Oxford lends itself admirably to the purpose, for although the compulsory area laid down in the provisional order granted by the board of trade is only a quarter of a mile square, it comprises 12 colleges, 39 public buildings and churches, 9 hotels and 840 shops, offices and private houses.

The promoters of the scheme, who are chiefly local people—both town and gown being represented on the directorate of the company—are to be congratulated on the opportuneness of the date chosen for the inauguration of the new system. By the eve of "commem." Oxford will have exchanged her old lamps for new, and the gay undergraduate and his lovely women folk will foot it in the corn exchange beneath the radiant beams of the new illuminant.—London Globe.

A Double Lamb.

Talking about freaks of nature, a ewe belonging to William Pickens, near this city, performed a feat the other day that takes the wool. She gave birth to a lamb that had eight legs and two tails. From the navel forward it was a perfectly formed lamb, but the hind end doubled up on nature.—Louisiana (Mo.) Press.

Everybody knows what it is, and that is the reason they go to Hellenbrand's for that pure ice cream soda.

The Judge's Change.

Few persons in this world are called upon to suffer more or be more embarrassed on many occasions and at the least opportune times than those afflicted with absentmindedness. There is no politician in this state who does not know Judge Austin A. Yates, of Schenectady, who never fails to attend county, district, state and national conventions, and who always has something good to say at all. Judge Yates is the most absentminded of men. He is the most forgetful of men, and the tricks that his infirmity have played upon him would fill a volume. Here is one:

He came down here not a great while ago and visited a theater where a most emotional, sensational and affecting melodrama was in progress. He had a friend with him, and he laid down a twenty dollar bill at the box office to purchase two tickets. The man behind the little hole tossed the pasteboards out and seventeen dollars in change. Intent on what he was going to see, the judge very naturally seized the tickets and went on his way rejoicing, leaving the balance of the twenty dollar bill behind. He and his friend had seats in the midst of a remarkably select company, the play was enjoyable, and the judge, who is nothing if not earnest, sat there spellbound. At last the villain in the play said to one of his partners in crime, and with a hard look—applicable to the stage:

"How much money does the wretch want?"

The word "money" brought the judge's thoughts back to the box office and to the change he had left lying there. Forgetting where he was and thinking for the instant that the question had been applied to him, he slapped his knee and fairly shouted:

"Seventeen dollars, by the Lord Harry!"

The effect on the audience can be imagined, but never described, and nothing can induce that villain to recite lines wherein money appears, for with all an actor's superstition he imagines that the judge's inopportune, although pat, remark has given him bad luck forever.—New York Recorder.

Whole Villages at a Load.

A weakness for observation and a natural liking for philosophical reflection incited a young man who resides in Brooklyn and labors in New York to talk to a friend in this fashion: "Did you ever observe the Brooklyn bridge traffic in the busy hours morning and evening? Yes! Well, then, you must have been impressed with the fact that each crowded train moves enough persons from one side of the river to the other to make a good sized village. The trains are packed early in the morning and between 5 and 7:30 o'clock at night. Each train carries between 600 and 700 passengers. Now a country village with that number of inhabitants thinks very well of itself. It has three or four churches, a library, an opera house, and is clamoring at the postoffice department in Washington for a new postoffice. And yet the restless cable that stretches across the bridge yanks these villages back and forth at the rate of twenty-five or thirty an hour. I tell you this is a moving age in which we live."—New York Times.

He Stole Bradlaugh's Speech.

One evening Mr. Labouchere and Mr. Bradlaugh were both to speak at the same political meeting. The latter had the headings of his speech written in bold handwriting on large sheets of foolscap paper spread out before him. Mr. Labouchere, who was the first to speak, seeing those headings, thought he could not do better than use them, and thereupon began to deal with Mr. Bradlaugh's points one by one, taking them in a roundabout order so as not to arouse his friend's suspicions. At last Mr. Bradlaugh found himself without a point to speak on, and he realized that he was dealing with a humorist as well as a statesman.—London Cor. New York World.

A Valuable Horse.

A.—You are in mourning, my old friend?

B.—Yes.

A.—For whom?

B.—For my wife. She went out riding the other day, fell from her horse, and thereby lost her life.

A.—Really? I am sorry for you!

B.—Thanks.

A.—By the by, wouldn't you like to sell me that horse?

B.—Very sorry, but I intend getting married again.—Zeitgeist.

At the Steamship Docks.

Among the striking sights of New York are those to be seen at the docks. It is as interesting to look at a steamship load of Americans bound for Europe as to look at a steamship load of European immigrants coming into port. The outward bound Americans are apt to be less picturesque in their garb than the incoming foreigners.—New York Sun.
