

INSPECTED HOGS.

News from All Parts—Congress Will Adjourn, Etc.

FOR LUMPY JAW.

Treatment Recommended by Secretary Rusk.

CHICAGO, July 28.—Secretary Rusk is in the city, in connection with an experiment he is preparing to try on a large scale in the treatment of the disease known as lumpy jaw. It has recently been treated successfully by the administration internally of iodine of potassium. It is given in doses of one to three grains, dissolved in a pint of water. It is best administered before feeding, and doses should vary according to size and weight of cattle. Treatment can be applied without danger by any farmer. The secretary is also interested in extending microscopic inspection of pork, as the demand for inspected pork continues to increase, and it brings about half a cent per pound more in American and British markets than un-inspected. It is estimated that the farmers of the country will receive a cent a pound more for hogs marketed this year, than if there were no inspection.

In the House.

WASHINGTON, July 28.—Speaker declared the next thing in order was the motion made by Bingham yesterday to table the motion to reconsider the motion by which the $5,000,000 appropriation for the world's fair is included in the sundry civil bill. Bingham has offered no reference to the committee on rules, a resolution to do so immediately after this resolution, a motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the house agreed to the world's fair appropriation. It is not believed the senate will pass the joint resolution for adjournment on Saturday, until the house has acted on the world's fair matters.

CITY OF MEXICO, July 18.—Henry Adams, of New Hampshire, and James D. Walton, an Englishman, to settle a dispute as to the relative courage of Americans and Englishmen, agreed that the one who should first plant the flag of his nation on the edge of the crater of volcano near Colima should be declared the winner. When they reached the mountain smoke issued from the crater. The guides stopped some distance down the side and watched the adventurous climbers. When near the top there was a sudden eruption, and both were engulfed in molten lava.

ST. PAUL, July 28.—There is a panic among Dakota farmers, lest they are unable to harvest the great crop now being cut in the southern part of South Dakota, on account of the great scarcity of harvest hands. Band of Outlaws.

UNIONTOWNS, Pa., July 28.—One of the most daring and dangerous bands of outlaws, next to the Mollie Maguire, that ever persecuted the citizens of this state was until last Friday led by Jack Cooley. Cooley's band robbed travelers and the farmers of the surrounding country, fleeing to the coke regions when a sheriff posse would start in pursuit. Once in the coke regions it was almost impossible to make an arrest. A trap was set for Cooley last week, and he was captured and shot. His last words were: "See that my death is avenged." Today the facts in a horrible crime came to light from the sheriff, who arrested a man named Rankin, one of Cooley's band, for stealing a flock of sheep. Since Cooley's death Rankin is said to have been chief of the outlaws. The sheriff secured from an eye-witness the story of the methods pursued by the band in avenging the death of their leader. After the theft of the flock of sheep, the outlaws drove them to this place and sold them to a butcher. With the proceeds liquor was bought and the men revelled in the forest Monday last evening the band, numbering a dozen men, proceeded to the house of Wesley Sialer, near Haydentown. Sialer had helped to kill Cooley, it is said. He was seized by the outlaws and pinioned. His only child, a young girl, was assaulted by members of the band. The helpless father's cries for help were stifled by blows and a gag. His struggle for liberty was only stopped by a blow from a musket butt. After accomplishing their revenge the band departed. It is thought that the girl will not recover. A sheriff's posse started in pursuit of the band, and "lynch them all" is the cry heard here.

CHICAGO, July 28.—The tug Chicago was run into by the steamer City of Concord, off Hyde park, early yesterday and sank almost instantly. Steward Oscar Page and Deckhand William Kopfer, who were asleep below the deck, went to the bottom with the ill-fated craft.

Punishment of Iams.

HARRISBURG, Pa., July 28.—The punishment of Private Iams by Colonel Streator is the subject of much unfavorable comment here among civilians, and they denounce it in very plain language. Governor Pattison refuses to be interviewed on the subject. He has not as yet received the protest of the newspaper correspondents calling for an investigation. Bishop Thomas McGehee, the head of the Harrisburg diocese of the Roman Catholic church, has written a protest against Iams' punishment to the Daily Patriot. He bitterly denounces the act as a disgrace to civilization, and as tending to have a demoralizing effect upon the esprit du corps of our military organization.

From Cœur d'Alene.

WARDEN, Idaho, July 28.—The order relieving the company of United States troops stationed at Bunker Hill mine created consternation among non-union men, and about forty demanded their time. A guard of ten men was left there to pacify the workmen. No more prisoners will be paroled. They are to be taken before the United States commissioner's court, which is to be convened. When turned over they will be delivered into the custody of the United States marshal, and in this way the state authorities will be relieved from the necessity of providing for them. One hundred and six prisoners are confined here in a building but poorly adapted to such a purpose, and the place is infested with vermin. At Wallace there are 110 prisoners. If all the troops should be withdrawn, it is said there would be an exodus of non-union miners. The war department desires to withdraw all the troops as soon as possible, but the state authorities are using every effort to detain one or two companies of the United States troops.

Fifty Deaths.

CHICAGO, July 28.—The slaughter of the sun was still on in Chicago today. Fifty deaths and more than twice as many prostrations from heat occurred. Although there is now a prediction of a cold wave and the possibility of relief, it is certain that a number of deaths will be largely increased during the next few days. The hospitals are filled with patients suffering from sunstroke, many of whom cannot recover.

The record of yesterday, which surpassed anything in the number of deaths and prostration from heat that this city has ever known, was eclipsed by the awful work of the sun today. The temperature ranged in the shade from 92 to 94 degrees, and for days past the wind was from the south and blistering hot. The majority of casualties was among laboring men, and in portions of the city occupied by the poorer classes. The number of horses which were struck, causing temporary blockades in the crowded thoroughfares, could hardly be counted. There were not enough horses in the police department to carry off the animals which fell during the day, and about the business center of the city alone it was found necessary to call on outside help, for the ambulances and patrol wagons had all they could do to care for human beings.

Prayer in a Gambling Den.

It is narrated that a clergyman, desirous of improving his sanctuary and unable to procure the necessary funds from his congregation, decided to secure financial aid from the winks of the enemy. Late one night he ushered himself into a gaming house and asked the manager: "Can I have the privilege of offering a brief prayer and passing round the hat among those assembled here?" "Certainly," replied the manager. The clergyman mounted a chair and for fully fifteen minutes appealed to those about him the error of their ways, and at the same time suggested that they assist him in the work of the Lord by contributing out of their abundance. Just as he had finished an old time "gam" who in his life had won and lost two or three fortunes, exclaimed: "I say, pardners, I reckon that clergyman there holds a winning hand for the other shore, and I guess we'd better sing a hymn and then chip in a collection for the church he wants to fix up. I'm betting ten to seven that churches are a good thing, and it don't seem very long since I used to accompany my sainted mother to church 'way down east, but she's in heaven now. Anyway, let's sing the doxology, 'Praise God from whom all blessings flow. Most of yous know it. Now sing." The gambler had a good baritone voice, and he started the hymn and was at once joined by every one present. At its conclusion he remarked in a cool and collected manner: "I say, Mr. Minister—forgot your right name, you know—pass 'round the hat." And tossing him a twenty dollar gold piece, he said, "I'll play that to win!" When the clergyman's hat had made the circuit it contained almost $1,000, and the needed improvements on the church were begun the following week—Saratoga Cor. Chicago Times.

Getting Around It.

There is a small boy in Harlem who is "born to trouble as the sparks fly upward," and the greater part of his young life has been spent in incurring diseases and accidents and recovering therefrom. His last series of mishaps began with scarlet fever, went on to a dislocated knee, a sprained wrist, a jammed thumb that necessitated the carrying of his arm in a sling for a couple of weeks, and culminated in the dislocation of some of the small bones of his right foot. The confinement to the bed and house that all these entailed so lowered his physical tone that his physician prescribed quinine. This seemed to him a remedy worse than the disease, and after exhausting all his powers of resistance, entreaties and cajoleries to avoid taking the medicine, but without avail, his mother found him one day laboring in an unusually industrious manner with pen, ink and paper. "Are you writing to grandma?" queried she. "No, mamma," said this youthful enthusiast gravely. "I am writing an article for the paper to say that quinine is very indigestible." "And what good will that do?" asked mamma, curious to know what process of reasoning was going on in the small mind. "Why, when doctors read what the paper says about it they won't give quinine any more."—New York Recorder.

How Eyes Are Tested.

The theory of the optically perfect eye is that parallel rays of light entering it are brought to a focus on its retina. Any deviation from this condition constitutes an error of refraction and requires for its correction an artificial variation of the luminous rays. The generally adopted method of determining the refraction of the eye is to use test types placed at such a distance that the rays of light emanating from them may be regarded in practice as parallel; and the deviation from parallelism necessary to correct a refractive error is effected by placing a lens in front of the eye. There are many other methods of changing the course of luminous rays coming from a test object, and of these the single convex lens is the simplest and most often used in optometry.—New York Telegram.

Caviar for Exportation.

For exportation caviar, which is nothing but sturgeon's eggs, is prepared in two different ways. The eggs are washed and then immersed in strong brine for three-quarters of an hour, and finally allowed to drain. In this way "granular caviar" is obtained. For "compact" caviar the eggs are first cleaned, then pickled and finally allowed to dry slowly. Then they are packed closely in canvas bags, which are inclosed in wooden barrels, after which they are ready for shipment.—Boston Times.

Title Pages.

It was not until 1470 that a title page was introduced to books, and in England not till shortly before 1490, when W. De Machline issued one to his little book on the pestilence. Caxton never used them, but Wynkyn De Worde employed them in nearly all his books.—Philadelphia Ledger.
