A PROFESSIONAL LEG BREAKER.

Making a Business of Falling on Bad Sidewalks and Getting Damages.

The authorities of Anaconda, Mon., have sent letters of inquiry here in regard to one C. F. Burkhart, who, it appears, had sued that city for $5,000 damages for a broken leg and other injuries sustained, it is claimed, by a fall upon the sidewalk there some time ago. If Burkhart is not an assumed name the man is not known here. There are several features about the case, however, that recall the career in this section of one of the shrewdest confidence men who ever worked a game in Illinois.

The man's name was Landers. He was an expert telegraph operator and one of the smoothest of talkers. Landers made it a regular business for several years of traveling through the state, falling down on bad sidewalks in country towns, and breaking his leg. It was always the same leg that was broken. A heavy damage suit followed each accident, and the man fairly coined money at his peculiar business. His success in towns and small cities fired his ambition for greater things. Accordingly, fifteen years or more ago, he went to St. Louis, found a bad place in the pavement on Oliver street, and promptly fell down and broke his leg there.

He afterward compromised the matter with the city for $2,000 and actually secured every dollar of it. After that Landers came here and opened up one of the largest retail grocery stores in the state of Illinois. The place was run upon metropolitan principles, and made a fine showing for a country store. The trade of the town, however, did not justify the outlay, and the country grocer soon went to the wall. After the failure of the business he left it to straighten out itself, and returned to the more profitable business of leg breaking.

As a pretender Landers had no superior, and few if any equals. Some of the best physicians were taken in by the fellow. He submitted to painful operations with wonderful fortitude. A number of physicians, whose honesty has never for a moment been questioned, have gone upon the witness stand in court and taken a solemn oath that the man's leg had been broken and reset by them, when in reality the fellow had never been hurt at all.

The man's ability as a pretender in that line was equaled only by his ability to tell with wonderful effect a tale of woe. His pitiful story was told in such a manner that it carried conviction with it. It seldom or never failed to bring about the desired verdict. Landers finally drifted to Chicago, where he was caught in some swindle and was sent to the Joliet penitentiary for a term of years. The term expired several years ago and the leg breaker left for the great and growing west.—Ashley (Ill.) Letter.

A Foolhardy Girl.

A quite thrilling incident occurred on the straight stretch of the line of the New York and New Jersey railroad between Woodridge and Carlstadt Sunday afternoon. As a passenger train was proceeding at full speed, a sixteen-year-old girl left her half dozen companions in the roadway that runs near the track and stepped quickly in front of the locomotive, which was not more than 300 feet away.

She was laughing defiantly, facing the locomotive, standing squarely between the rails, and the engineer knew that she was bent upon mischief and not upon suicide. He made the passengers jump on their seats with the blood curdling whistle that he sent out of his engine, but the girl between the rails snapped her fingers and danced derisively.

The engineer had to stop the train or run over her. Of the two evils he chose the one he supposed to be the lesser. His fireman did not agree with him, but there was no time to argue the point. When the locomotive was brought to a standstill its pilot was hardly five feet from the girl's skirts. "I told them you'd have to stop," she said. "I knew you daren't run over me." Then she laughed and ran after her companions.—Troy Times.

Singing His Way Out.

Every now and then Sing Sing prison furnishes a romance, and a case in point is the story told about Alfred Sheridan, who is serving a term for forgery. He was engaged to be married in the week he was arrested for his crime, and so devoted was his fiancee that she expressed a willingness to marry him even behind the prison bars; but this he would not allow. She often goes to visit him, and as they are both fond of music they sing together, to the delight of the prisoners. She has written several pretty songs and sent them to Sheridan. He has also composed several songs in his prison cell.

One of his compositions, entitled "Sweet Little Mary Ann," was written by jotting down the notes on a piece of cardboard as he whistled the air. He has sold it to a New York music publisher for twenty-five dollars and 1,000 copies. With the cash and what he expects to realize from his 1,000 copies he has engaged a lawyer to present his case to the governor for a pardon, and as a preliminary his sweetheart is soliciting signers to a petition to be presented to the governor at the same time.—New York Times.

Populous Chicago Water.

Professor W. S. Haines, of Chicago, says: "Water that contains up to 250 bacteria to the cubic centimeter is classed as good water." In Chicago water examined by him during the last few months he found at no time less than 2,000 bacteria to the cubic centimeter, and sometimes as high as 8,000.—Chicago Tribune.

A Mathematical Curiosity.

Jacques Inaudi, a young Frenchman twenty-four years old, is astonishing the people of Paris with his marvelous feats of mental calculation, which surpass anything that has ever been known before of a similar character. He performs multiplications and divisions of numbers of twenty-four figures, and extracts the square and cube roots of numbers with almost incredible rapidity and an hour afterward he will repeat every number written upon the blackboard upon which he has been operating.

His memory is prodigious, but his mnemonic powers are exclusively turned toward numerical operations and algebraic problems. The young calculator scarcely knows how to read or write and does not interest himself in any other pursuit than calculating, which amuses him constantly.

His method of multiplying is simple and natural, although different from the common one. Instead of beginning at the right by units he multiplies in round numbers of a single figure each and adds the products. In this way he will multiply two sums of three figures each in six seconds.

While Inaudi's power, like that of a musician who plays "by ear" without knowing a note, has a fascination, it cannot be reconciled with science, for whose methods and formulas he has a high disdain.

If Inaudi, however, could be persuaded to explain his mode of procedure fully and allow it to be published, it would certainly make a pamphlet well worth reading and preserving as a mathematical curiosity.—Youth's Companion.

No Fun at a Japanese Auction.

"Every woman at some time or another has a mania for auction going," said a young woman who has been around the world several times and is full of bright, witty anecdotes and jokes on herself that she has no scruples in telling for the benefit of her interested listeners.

"I was just at the height of this fever when papa carried me off to Japan, and consequently you can imagine my delight when, in one of those funny little towns of that far off land, we learned that an auction was to take place.

"Here was my opportunity. If I enjoyed the spirited bidding in English, how much more exciting it would be in this unknown land and in the odd little booth that served as the auction room.

"The first object to be sold was a curious bit of bamboo furniture, and it was held high by the auctioneer for all to see.

"It did not seem to take, however, for no one said a word, though they all looked hard at it and then marched off to a black box in the corner, in which they deposited certain little slips.

"My curiosity being aroused at this, an English speaking Jap who stood near me explained that it was their method of conducting a sale. The bits of paper represented each one's bid, and when all had deposited their slips the box was opened and the highest amount offered bought the article.

"Imagine my disgust. No noise, no excitement; entirely too prosaic for me. Therefore I came away feeling I had been at a funeral."—Philadelphia Times.

The Velocipede in the French Army.

What was at first regarded as a simple amateur venture in the way of experiment—the French velocipede for service on land and water as well—is now treated by the Marseilles papers as a practical and available mechanism. Instead of skeleton wheels the wheels are made hollow, so that when the machine enters the water they support the device with its rider; they are also grooved on their circumference with rubber tire for land use. At the sides of the wheels are small copper paddles, and when the machine is run from the land into the water these serve to propel it, so that, while the machine can make very good speed on land, it is able to make about three miles an hour in water with the same exertion that is needed for its propulsion on a good road.

It is stated that it does not easily tip over when in the water, and that when some special features have been still further perfected its efficiency and usefulness will be largely enhanced. The points mentioned in which improvements are desirable are the addition of airtight compartments, enlargement of the paddles and a reduction of the weight of the entire machine.—New York Sun.

An Exhibit of Army Uniforms.

One of the most interesting exhibits in the Government building at the World's fair will be a display of arms, uniforms, tents and flags in use in the United States army at various times since 1776. This display is being prepared in one of the Gray's Ferry arsenal buildings. A space of 6,000 square feet has been set aside for this exhibit. The uniforms will be draped upon lay figures and arranged in realistic attitude.

The one particular group in which especial pride is taken is to consist of seven figures on horseback, representing a general of the present army and staff. The central figure will be as nearly as possible an exact likeness of Major General Schofield. All the articles were made entirely by Americans and of American materials. There is a collection of at least twenty-five flags, and these alone are valued at $8,000.—Philadelphia Ledger.

The Rat is Dangerous.

Dr. S. E. Weber, assistant state veterinarian of Pennsylvania, advances the theory that the rat is a transmitter of some of the most dangerous diseases which afflict humanity, chief of which is tuberculosis or consumption. He cites the results of post mortem examinations on more than 1,000 of the animals in proof of the theory. Dr. Weber says that nowhere does the ubiquitous rat do more harm as a disease transmitter than in the farmyard and barn, where he comes into contact with the cattle and horses.—Philadelphia Press.

HIS LIVER WEIGHED TWO TONS.

A Monster Shark That Was Captured Off the Coast of Massachusetts.

It is about a big fish that I write, but it is a big story. I saw the fish. I took his dimensions by actual measurement and I saw the liver.

In the annals of Cape Cod, published by the Rev. Mr. Freeman in 1863, he mentions that in 1803 Provincetown had a regulation relating to the carcasses of whales, sharks, horse mackerel, etc., which required that they be towed below low water mark, which would indicate that these marine animals were so common as to be in some degree offensive in warm weather. Many of them were captured for their oil. Right whales yielded 20, 40, 80 and sometimes 100 barrels; humpbacks, 15 to 20 barrels; grampus, 1, 2 or 3; blackfish, 1 barrel; sharks, from 1 gallon to 7 or 8 barrels; porpoise, 2 gallons, and a boatload of dogfish yielded about 1 barrel of oil.

Now my big fish was called a shark, though he was not of the man eating or shovel nosed variety. Mr. N. E. Atwood, a distinguished and practical ichthyologist of Provincetown, pronounced the fish a liver shark or sea elephant, and considered it rare. The fish was almost entirely white, and as handsome in form as a mackerel. He was caught in 1862, inside of what is called Long Point, forming an outer boundary of Provincetown's beautiful harbor.

The fishermen had spread their seines there for mackerel and this big fish had got entangled in them, so that he was easily pulled to the shore, where the tide left him high and dry. Being at that time engaged in business in Provincetown, I was invited to visit the monster and see him cut up for the purpose of extracting his liver. By the way, all the oil of a shark is in his liver, while that of a whale, of course, is in his flesh, or blubber. I took a rule and measured this shark and found his length to be just thirty-one feet, the breadth of his tail was seven feet, and his circumference in the thickest part sixteen feet.

The liver of this shark weighed two tons, and this is how it was determined: The liver was cut in pieces and pitched into a dory; the dory carried a ton and a half in weight besides the rower, as has been proved, bringing her down to her upper streak; the dory was twice loaded deep with this liver, and so the fishermen thought the weight was nearly three tons, but to be within bounds I concluded to call it two tons, and so it is recorded in this veracious chronicle. After the oil had been tried out I found that it made seven barrels full, and was worth at that time $200.—Belfast Age.

Small Feet of Boston Girls.

"Contrary to popular opinion the female descendants of the Puritans have smaller feet than those of the Cavaliers," said Mr. William Cooper, junior member of an extensive New England shoe factory. "We manufacture ladies' shoes almost exclusively. We sell most small shoes in the northeast, most large ones in the southwest, in Arkansas, New Mexico and Texas. The Carolinas, Alabama, Mississippi, Kansas and Nebraska also order a good many large sizes. Ohio, Virginia, Kentucky, Maryland, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa and Missouri buy medium sizes.

"The retail trade of large cities requires more small sizes in proportion than does that of smaller cities and villages. Still there is a great difference in cities. Boston is preeminently the city of small footed women. Next in the order named come Hartford, St. Louis, Louisville, New Orleans, New York and Denver. Philadelphia Cincinnati, Chicago, Pittsburg and Salt Lake City may be classed as big footed."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Extent of the Gulf Weed.

The Sargasso sea, or floating masses of gulf weed in mid-Atlantic, which impeded the ships of Columbus 400 years ago, has been the subject of careful study by Dr. Krummel, a German mareographer, who takes a different view of its origin from that commonly accepted. He shows, to begin with, that the sea is much more extensive than Humboldt supposed. The middle or thickest part is elliptical in form, the great axis lying along the Tropic of Cancer, and the foci at 45 degs. and 70 degs. west longitude. Around this are more extensive but thinner accumulations of the weed, which vary with the prevailing winds.—London Globe.

Seemed So, on One Side at Least.

The following story is told on a member of congress who has been named the "Great Objector:" "It is said that he was going down Pennsylvania avenue, Washington, as a drove of sheep was coming up the street. He stopped to look at them. A member of the house, who was going by, placed his hand on his shoulder and said, 'Judge, those sheep appear to be sheared.' 'Yes, yes,' replied the judge, looking at them keenly through his glasses, 'on this side they do; yes, yes, on this side.'"

The Umbrella Industry.

In 1851 not less than $125,000 were invested in alpaca cloth for covering umbrellas. In Paris there were 1,700 persons employed in making umbrellas.—Detroit Free Press.

Opening the Canal.

The most acceptable proposition that can be made to persons troubled with chronic constipation, is to open that important canal—the bowels. That proposition can be carried out by the parties interested if they resort to Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the most effective, most genial alterative extant. It is the mistake of many otherwise sensible people, that they resort to drastic, or, in other words, violent purgatives, without exaggeration, this is highly injurious, since medicaments weaken the bowels besides convulsing both them and the stomach with pain. Relief sought from the Bitters comes freely enough, but they never produce pain, excessive action, or subsequent weakness of the bowels. Liver and kidney trouble, malaria, dyspepsia, lack of stamina and a tendency to rheumatism, are remedied by this pleasant substitute for drenching cathartics.
