A Field for Ambitious Young Men.

Perhaps no kind of industry offers a more inviting field to the speculative mind than the elephant trade. It is not overdone. Catching, taming and selling elephants constitute a business open to any one who chooses to fallow it. Then elephant prices, once so moderate, have grown prodigiously. Fifty years ago a tame elephant could be bought in India for about $200. Now prices range from $1,000 to $4,000. Yet it is no harder to tame an elephant now than before, and there is no glut in the market.

Elephants sell readily according to desirability at the figures suggested. Besides, the occupation is one in which sport can be combined with profit. It is adventurous and exciting, full of interest from the time an elephantine trail is discovered until the capture of the monster is effected. But the sport does not end here. Any amount of animation may be experienced in taming elephants and teaching them the comities incidental to menagerie life.

We throw these hints out in the hope that they may prove helpful to energetic and enterprising young men who are hesitating which road to fortune they shall choose.—Troy Press.

Seeking a Comrade in the Grave.

During the Garibaldian campaign of 1866, in which Signor Genala, the present Italian minister, took part, he had a comrade whose mother had been a second parent to himself. This comrade was missed after the battle of Montesuello, and nothing could be heard of him. Genala went to his friend's mother and swore he would bring her son, dead or alive. Then he went in search of him in Austria, Hungaria, Bohemia and Croatia, visiting all the hospitals, prisons, lazzarettos and barracks, but all in vain.

Genala then returned to Italy and instituted inquiries and researches, obtaining permission to uncover the graves in many small cemeteries near Montesuello, and finally found and recognized the corpse of his friend. He transported the remains to Crema, where his mother had the consolation of giving her dead son an honored burial.—Roma.

A Cloudburst.

Cab Lee, a squaw man of the Amargosa valley, tells of sleeping near the mouth of Furnace creek canyon one night years ago with a "bug hunter," as the desert tramping scientists are called in camp. It was so hot that the bug hunter could not sleep. About midnight he heard a roaring noise up the canyon, which, as it kept increasing in volume, caused him to look up that way. To his surprise he saw, as he supposed, the sky that appeared between the canyon walls grow suddenly white.

At that moment Lee rolled over and the bug hunter asked him what ailed the sky. Lee gave one glance and then yelled: "Cloudburst! Climb!" They scrambled up the steep wall just in time to save their lives. Lee thinks the foaming wall of water that had whitened the sky was not less than 100 feet high.—San Francisco Argonaut.

OWED IT ALL TO THE OLD WOMAN

How a Newsboy Sold a Lot of Papers on a New York Street Car.

The car—it was a Fourth avenue one—was bowling along merrily. It so happened—as strange things do sometimes happen in this prosaic world—that all the seats on one side of the car were occupied by men and all the seats on the other side by women. The women were all young and pretty, too, which might be accounted a strange thing anywhere else than in New York. Now, when a man is riding in a street car a pretty face is always a "cheering sight to see," but when there are a dozen lovely faces to contemplate the joy is proportionately increased.

Serene enjoyment was depicted on the face of every man in the car. Forgotten were all the ordinary cares that infest the day. No man was in a hurry to reach his destination. In fact there was much inward rejoicing at the lack of rapid transit.

Into this temporary abode of bliss hopped a shrill lunged newsboy. When he perceived that not a man on the car had a newspaper his eyes lighted with joyous expectancy.

"Extree! extree!" he shouted fiercely and gleefully. "Full account of de 'orrible disaster 'n awful loss of life."

But the men only scowled at him.

"Wot's de matter wid de blokes?" he asked of the conductor before leaping off the platform.

"Can't you see?" replied the conductor, contemptuously: dey's talking in de pretty girls. Dere's de greatest lot of 'em on dis car I ever carried."

An old woman entered the car. She was fat and she was homely, and she waddled rather than walked. No man rose to give her a seat. Each man felt that his neighbor might be harboring some such intention and feared to anticipate him. The old woman waddled to the end of the car, heaved a sigh and caught on to a strap.

"Pray take my seat, madam," said one of the prettiest of the pretty girls, rising.

"Oh, thank you, ma'm," replied the old woman, gratefully; "but it's a shame to deprive you of it. If I wasn't so old—but perhaps one of the gentlemen will give you a seat."

"Indeed," said the pretty girl, smiling, and thereby making herself look more bewitching than ever, "I couldn't think of accepting one from any of them. They are all so dreadfully tired."

Half of the dozen men had started simultaneously to rise. They dropped back into their seats looking sheepish and dejected. And the half dozen that hadn't begun to rise looked equally unhappy. A change had come o'er the spirit of their dreams. A pretty face is not a cheering sight to see when you know that it's owner entertains a very small opinion of you. And every man in that car felt that every woman in the car, including the one who was old and fat, held a cheap opinion of him. Instead of seeking the pretty face opposite, their eyes fell on the floor.

Another newsboy boarded the car.

"Extree! extree!" he yelled. "Full account of de 'orrible disaster 'n awful loss of life."

He didn't have to yell a second time. Every man was in a hurry to read that tale of disaster; so much so that they all actually buried their faces behind their newspapers.

And the pretty women all exchanged smiles and looked very much tickled at something.

"Golly!" said the newsboy to the conductor, "I struck it rich that time, didn't I?"

"You bet," said the conductor; "but you owe it all to de old woman."—New York Herald.

Blindfold.

Nine persons out of ten would probably give the derivation of blind as coming directly from blind, and fold from the practice of folding a cloth round the eyes, as in the game of blindman's buff. The word has, however, nothing to do with fold, but means felled, or struck ,blind. and might be written blindfelled. In the same way the word buttery is easily confused with the common term butter, with which, however, it has no connection, save in the minds of those who do not know it to be a contraction for bottlery, a place where bottles are kept, and over which the bottler, or butler, presides.—Chambers' Journal.

Portland Cement in Germany.

The manufacture of Portland cement was first introduced into Germany in 1853. Now there are sixty large works, having the same annual production as England—20,000,000 barrels. The raw materials are of exceedingly unfavorable character, but the manufacturers have made a serious study of the properties and uses of Portland cement, and now know exactly what rules to follow to regulate their operations, and the consumer can depend on the product offered him. The association of manufacturers has had much to do with the immense development of the industry in Germany. In France the industry grew slowly, the total production in 1880 hardly exceeding 750,000 barrels a year; now it is 1,800,000 barrels.—New York Evening Sun.

Books in English Prisons.

One of the amenities permitted by the authorities of convict prisons, and of which the convicts to their credit avail themselves very largely, is the large and extensive circulating library connected with each establishment. A convict prison library contains as good a collection of books as can be seen on the shelves of a first class free library and reading room. Some of the best works of English, French and German authors are passed weekly from cell to cell in all English prisons. The reader, no doubt, can imagine what a boon interesting and readable books must be to prisoners who are quiet and intelligent. Serials bound up in half yearly volumes are included in the prison catalogue.—London Tit-Bits.

The Prince of Wales' Tip

A friend of mine saw the Prince of Wales get out of a hansom and give the driver a coin which the man held in his palm and looked at for some time, after the manner of cabbies who wish to impress their dissatisfaction silently on their fare. Usually, however, their dissatisfaction is vocal.

"Was that 'is 'ighness, Joe?" asked a brother cabby.

"It was," answered Joe, still looking at the coin.

"Wot d'he give ye?"

Joe solemnly spat on the silver and slipped it in his pocket.

"E couldn't a' given me more if 'e was a king. Strike me blind if 'e didn't give me 'is bloomin crown."

The prince had paid five times the legal fare.—Detroit Free Press.

When Romans Kissed.

Rowena, the beautiful daughter of the Saxon Hengist, is credited with having introduced kissing into the British islands, but it seems to me that had the natives been so utterly unenlightened the Romans could hardly have failed to anticipate her. The Romans had a really delightful word for a kiss—osculum, which came from os, the mouth, and meant a little mouth, a sweet mouth. "Give me a sweet little mouth," would be the phrase used when a good little Roman boy asked his mother for a kiss.—Good Words.

Where Coaling Stations Should Be.

Admiral Bowden-Smith, Royal navy, says that because coal deteriorates very rapidly in hot climates the coaling stations for the British fleet should be on the main routes of ocean commerce, where there will be constant demands for it in peace times, and where a quantity of coal of the best steaming quality will always be on hand.—New York Times.

Too Much Risk.

Helen—Did you do it?

Dickey—Of cawse not. He might not have given me the right change, don't you know?—Life.
