FUN WITH A DRUMMER.

A Wonderful Echo That is a Perpetual Source of Joy to a Sleepy Town.

"The meanest trick that was ever played on me," said a St. Louis drummer who was trying to boom a conversation in the smoking cubby in a sleeper, "was by an echo. The little town is on the side of the hill and is as sleepy and uninteresting a place as one will find in a year's journey. I got into the town on one boiling hot day in August about 1 o'clock, and proceeded to rustle about to get through business and skip out.

"The town was so infernally lazy looking that I didn't have much confidence in my ability to get business. At the postoffice corner an aged and decrepit gray mule, with flapping ears and solemn mien presided over the session of whittlers, who were in session under the big sycamore tree. I accosted one of the group to find out where Josh Wilkins, the principal storekeeper, might be found, and learned that he was 'tending a burying over in Catnip Hollow.' Just as I was about to move away I heard a muffled cry of:

"'Help! help!'

"The whittlers paid no attention, and the gray mule was giving all his time to a fly on the end of his nose.

"Again I heard the distant muffled cry of 'Help! help!'

"It's a darn shame about that poor nigger," remarked one of the whittlers.

"What's the matter with the nigger?" I asked, at the same time looking suspiciously at the wooden grating manhole of the sewer on the corner.

"Well, you see, it's this way, stranger, Bill Star's bull pup crawled up the sewer from the crack and got fast, and when the nigger crawled up after him he got fast, too."

"Great heavens! Why aren't you digging for him! The poor fellow will die!"

"Of course he may die, stranger, but then it's pretty hot today, and he is only a nigger, anyway."

"This is inhuman! Come, men, and we'll rescue the poor fellow."

"Just then another cry of 'Help!' drove me almost to a frenzy. I gave some change to the lazy colored men and sent them for shovels and picks. They came, and after distributing the implements I went to digging like a crazy man. Presently I looked around to see why the others were not helping me, and there was not a soul in sight. I was wild with rage, and cried down the manhole to ask how the man was getting along. Not a word came in answer. I backed off a little to survey the work, and heard that same muffled sound say:

"Come off the perch! You are an old fool!"

I looked around and saw the whole town coming at me. They were laughing and shouting, and I knew I was the cause of a great joke. They led me to a barroom and told me to register in a big book labeled 'Echo Fools.' There were over 800 names of people who had been fooled. It was one of those whispering echoes where some is thrown back from the bluff to one particular spot."

THE BENEFITS OF READING.

An English Convict Ran Across a Work on Chemistry Which Gave Him Ideas.

Good and expensive scientific works are to be found in a prison library, and the perusal by illiterate men, as the bulk of convicts may be said to be, leads very often to strange and curious results that aptly illustrate the truth of the poet's axiom of a little knowledge being a dangerous thing. I had occasion once to enter a prisoner's cell and search it in his presence. To my surprise I found the man's library book was a large and excellent work on chemistry. The convict was extremely ignorant, and quite incapable of reading intelligently so abstract a work.

"Have you read this book?" I inquired of him.

"Yesir, I have," he replied proudly.

"And what were you reading about last, Jones?"

"About hair, guv'nor."

"Well, what does the author say about hair?"

"He says 'ow hair is composed of two kinds of gin."

"Gin!" I exclaimed in amazement at this astounding statement. "Well, Jones," I continued, "that fully accounts for the authorities keeping your hair closely cropped."

"The hair I'm a-talking about," Jones lucidly explained, "is not the 'air of the 'ead, but the hair we breathe. You bloom in screws," he added, "think yer know hev'y r'think, but when it comes to the pint yer don't know nothink."

"Go on, Jones," I said, highly amused. "What about the gin?"

"Hatomorphic hair," Jones proceeded, dogmatically, "is composed of two kinds of gin--hydroxgin and nitrogen. Now listen, guv'nor, and learn something useful to teach yer kids. Hoxygin is a much stronger and more intoxicatin spirit than nitrogen; so much so, in fact, that nature makes use of the bloomin nitrogen to dilute the bloomin hoxygin."

"I think, Jones," I said, preparing to leave the cell, "you had better read yer chemistry over again before airing your scientific knowledge."

"It's my private 'pinion," Jones remarked sagely, "that them 'ere scientific toffs hindulge in a glass or two of that most intoxicatin hoxygin now and agen; and that's what makes 'em so bloomin clever."--London Tit-Bits.

Bookselling Is Business.

The publisher anxiously awaits the literary wares which will satisfy the demand of the moment. It is by selling them that he lives, and consequently he wishes to buy them. But still he will buy them on the lowest terms possible, in order to make the highest profit, for he is a merchant. The histories and novels, the epics and lyrics, the essays and philosophical systems, are merchandise. If Plato and Shakspeare are famous, their fame alone makes their merchandise merchantable. But if they are unknown, the marketable value of their merchandise must be tested by the current public taste. Can we fairly select one class of traders and insist that they shall be philanthropists?

Dealers in chinaware, for instance, may we justly require that they shall buy at the highest prices all the bowls we paint, or offer them on commission, and pay us large annual profits because dealcomania is an art so elevating and refined and most of the artists are so poor--George William Curtis in Harper's.

The Japanese Hell.

The Japanese language has no equivalent for our word "hell," but has the word "jigoku" instead. Jigoku consists of, first, eight immense hot hells, ranging one beneath the other in tiers. Each of these hells has sixteen additional hells outside its gates, like so many antechambers, so that there are in all 186 hot hells. Second--There are eight large cold hells, each with its sixteen antehells, making the same number of cold that there are of hot hells. Besides these 272 hot and cold hells for offenders of the common sort, the wily Japs have twenty mammouth "hells of utter darkness," into which will be consigned the spirits of children who take the name of Dai Butsu, or Great Buddha, in vain.--Boston Globe.

The Truth at Last About the Hoopsnake.

Tom Lanier says he was attacked by a hoopsnake near the Drury brickyards. He was going out to the brickyards to apply for a job, when he saw the snake come rolling toward him. He darted behind a tree, which the snake struck with great force, sinking its fangs into the trunk of the tree an inch. The tree immediately commenced to swell, and in fifteen minutes was twice its natural size. The leaves on the trees soon withered, and next day when Lanier returned it was dead.--Atchison Globe.

Everybody knows what it is, and that is the reason they go to Hel-lebrand's for that pure ice cream soda.

The Old Timers Are Not in It.

While at our other store at Big Island, Va., last April, I was taken with a very severe attack of diarrhoea. I never had it worse in my life. I tried several old-time remedies, such as Blackberry Wine, Paregoric and Laudanum without getting any relief. My attention was then called to Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy by Mr. R. C. Tinsley who had been handling it there, and in less than five minutes after taking a small dose I was entirely relieved.--O. G. Burford, Harris Creek, Amherst Co., Va.
