It Made the Elevator Boy Tired. There are lots of ups and downs in your life, ain't there?" remarked a fat and florid gentleman to the elevator boy in a big down town build-

The boy made no response, but the fat and florid man was chuckling so hard at his own joke that he did not notice that it was not appreciated by the object of it.

When he got off the car the elevator boy said this to some of the other passengers:

"That joke always gives me a tired feeling. I have to listen to it about fifty times a day, and on some busy days it has been chucked at me as many as a hundred times. The man that makes it always laughs at it as though it was something that no man ever thought out before. I couldn't laugh at it if I got a dollar every time I heard it. I don't think it ever was a genuine joke anyhow. But perhaps I've got a prejudice against it. Soon after I got this job I struck what I thought was a great scheme to put a stop to that joke and show that I could be a little funny myself. I wrote out a sign and stuck it up in my car. This is what

"'Don't tell the elevator boy that there are lots of ups and downs in his life. He has been told it a thousand times already and it will make him very tired to hear it again.' "I felt quite proud of that and thought that the boss might take a fancy to me and give me a job in the office on the strength of it. But he didn't. When he saw it he just yanked it down and said that I was getting too fresh. And ever since then when anybody flings that joke at me I've just had to grin and bear it. But it's rough, all the same."— New York Herald.
