Long ago a military post was main tained on Gray's barbor, and adjacent was a large amount of cleared land, cultivated by soldiers as a farm. The troop owned a good many cattle, which astured on a part of the garrison ranch. For some reason or other the post was abandoned and the soldiers found it impossible to take their cattle with them. So the animals were left there, and since there were no settlers in the vicinity to look after them the herd grew wild. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

In spite of the fact that the heavy for est afforded but a small amount of pas turage, and notwithstanding the depredations of black wolves, which then infested the woods along the coast, the cattle increased in numbers very rapidly and were a constant annoyance to early settlers. Fences were broken down, crops were destroyed and tame cattle coaxed off to the woods. Many of the animals were killed by parties organized to exterminate them, and the remainder of the herd was driven into the skirts af the Olympics and into the coast range south and east of Gray's harbor. But every now and then the hunter for elk, which abound in these mountains, comes upon a bunch of wild cattle almost as fleet as the deer .- St
