WAS IT THE MT. WASHINGTON LIGHT? If So It Was Visible at Sea More Than Eight Hundred Miles Distant.

A possible explanation of the curious lights seen in the sky at sea by Captain Findlay, of the steamer Missouri, has been offered.

On the evening of Aug. 15, between 5 and 10 o'clock, the ship was in latitude 45 degs. 57 min., longitude 83 degs. 20 min., when there appeared a bright ball in the sky at about 15 degs. altitude, appearing and disappearing at intervals of about thirty seconds, and bearing east half south from the ship.

In character it resembled closely the same phenomenon and later in the evening the same phenomenon appeared in the west and west-northwest, on the 17th, in latitude 45 degs. 58 min., longitude 83 degs. 55 min., the phenomenon was again seen in the northwest at an altitude of about 20 degs. and remained visible from 10:30 until 11:15 p. m.

Lewis H. Rogers, of Boston, gives the following interesting explanation of the lights:

There is a large search light on Mount Washington, which was started up on the night of Aug. 13. The light was running and being flashed around the heavens between 8 and 11:30 o'clock. There is an attachment to the apparatus by which the beam of light is shut off and on at will, thus enabling the operator to make long and short flashes of light, by which method the Morse or any other understood alphabet is produced.

On the night of Aug. 17 we had the light pointed about 45 degs. over Portland for some time. The words "Congratulations," "Mount Washington," "Good night" were flashed and read by an operator on the top of a building in Portland, Me. He was not in line of vision with the light, and the beam was far over his head.

This beam of light would continue seaward almost indefinitely until it struck some cloud or mist in the heavens. Thus the light, or reflection of the light, might have at different times appeared to the east, south or north of an observer on the ocean.

To my mind, therefore, it is an almost assured fact that the light seen by Captain Findlay, of the steamer Missouri, emanated from the search light projector, thirty inches in diameter, located on the top of the tower on the summit of Mount Washington, Philadelphia, Penna.

"Why He Looks Under the Bed for Burglars before Retiring," said W. W. Greer, at the Lindell. "I was not always so careful, and came near being murdered and robbed as the result of neglecting this simple precaution."

I was in the employ of a lumber firm in Wisconsin, and a portion of my duties was to visit the logging camps and pay off the men. I usually carried about $1,500 in bills on these trips. I got to Chelsea late one night, from which place I was to take conveyance to the camp, and staid all night at the hotel.

I placed the money between the mattress, my pistol under my pillow and hung into the muzzle of my pistol. He had a large knife in one hand, with which he had evidently intended to cut my throat. He turned ashy pale as he saw his position, groveled on the floor and whined piteously. I recognized him as one of the loggers I had come to pay off, and was sorely tempted to kill him, but turned him over to the authorities instead, and he got a year in the pen. The Boy Was More Than Fleece. There is an active, healthy small boy in West End avenue who cannot comprehend what nervousness really is. Figler knows that it is something extremely disagreeable, for his mother has been nervous as long as he can remember.

His private opinion, expressed to his father one night, is that nerves are things brought on earth by evil spirits for the purpose of making little boys miserable. One day he overheard his mother telling a neighbor that her nerves were completely destroyed. The lad was overjoyed, and to celebrate what he considered to be an emancipation he went out in the back yard and romped with his big dog, with damaging results to his clothing as well as to his mother's gingham bed.

After the neighbor had gone away he burst into his mother's presence with a velocity that almost threw her into a spasm, and before she could utter a word he said: "Don't be so noisy, Harry!" he had his arms around her neck and was exclaiming: "Oh, mamma, now we won't have any more trouble with nerves, shall we? I heard you tell Mr. B. that yours were completely destroyed. Isn't that nice?"—New York Times.

A Lost Servant. Brown—you shouldn't make fun of the old, my boy.

Little Johnnie—Why, dad, the minister said we should honor the gray-haired of age.—New York Times.
