Great Relief

Is instantly afforded sufferers from Bronchitis, by the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Either as an anodyne, to allay inflammation, or an expectorant, to loosen and bring away the mucus, this preparation has no equal.

"Last winter I contracted a severe cold, which, by repeated exposure, became quite obstinate. I was much troubled with hoarseness and bronchial irritation. After trying various medicines, without relief, I at last purchased a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. On taking this medicine, my cough ceased almost immediately, and I have been well ever since."—Rev. Thomas R. Russell, Secretary Holston Conference and P. E. of the Greenville Dist. M. E. C., Jonesboro, Tenn.

"My mother was sick three years and very low with bronchitis. We feared nothing would cure her. One of my friends told me about Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. She tried it, has used eight bottles, and is now well."—T. H. D. Chamberlain, Baltimore, Md.

How Valuables Were Concealed During the War.

It was in the concealment of valuables that infinite varieties of ingenuity were displayed, says a writer in the Atlantic Monthly, some worthy of Poe's pirate (vide "The Gold Bug"), and some pathetic in their innocent disregard of the world and the world's craft. Rarely left above ground, these valuables were buried in all sorts of places, and all sorts of means were taken to leave no sign that the earth had been disturbed. Some persons preferred to dig holes in the woods where the spot could be covered with leaves or pine needles. A favorite choice was by the side of the briery fence corners in remote, unfrequented fields, especially if, as was usually the case in untilled fields, a thicket of young pines shut in the spot.

Behind a dense screen of this kind small packages were often buried in the day time; otherwise, all such work had, of course, to be done under cover of darkness. Sometimes, to make assurance doubly sure, a small brook would be dammed, the treasure rendered as near waterproof as possible, buried in the bed beneath, and then the water allowed to resume its former channel. It will be seen at a glance that so far as danger of discovery was concerned, this mode was the safest of all, provided it could be carried out unobserved. The concealer did not need to make a track on terra firma, neither on approaching or leaving the spot, for he had before him the Indian path of running water, while the stream running down its detritus of sand and gravel, soon made all parts of its bed alike.

However, only articles of small bulk could well be hidden in this way. A near neighbor of ours had several fine gold watches, one of them at least a valued family heirloom, whose safety caused him much anxiety. After earnestly considering every possible mode of concealment he finally decided to adopt the one last mentioned. A fruit jar was selected, tested as to its being perfectly airtight, and the watches, after being wrapped in flannel, were placed therein, the jar was securely sealed and the next day found the current of the spring branch flowing serenely above the treasure.

A few trusted their watches and jewelry to hollow trees and to clefts in lonely rocks, though the enterprise of the ubiquitous opossum hunter rendered this mode somewhat precarious. Such places being the favorite retreat opossum, there was danger that he might lead his pursuers straight to the selected cleft or hollow, and in getting him out they could scarcely fail to discover other contents of the lair. In one instance this really did occur.

A gentleman having concealed a watch and some diamonds in a small hollow tree, was startled on reconnoitering the place a few days later to find that the tree had not only been felled, but actually split open. He had given up his property for lost when he happened to spy it buried in the leaves, where it had dropped as the trunk was rent asunder. Fortunately the sable hunter had been too eager for his quarry to have an eye for anything else.

A Waspish Sting.

What some wags term "the business end of a wasp's sting" is scarcely more accurate than the acid eruptions of gas from the stomach, which we characterize as heartburn. Never was there a case of indigestion without this symptom. Both cause and effect are removable by the fine curative tonic, Hostetter's stomach bitters, which counteracts acidity and vigor upon a disordered and enfeebled stomach with certainty and despatch. Besides checking the growth of a rebellious stomach, the bitters wakes up a dormant liver, and causes the bowels to act like clockwork. An inveterate reputation has also been won by this professionally approved medicine as a means of eradicating and preventing malarial fevers and other diseases, and a tendency to rheumatism and kidney complaints. Scrupulous and nervous people are also remedied by it.

African Sandstorms.

The sandstorms of African deserts are caused by the great power of the sun's rays, the extreme dryness of the air and the small conducting power of the sand. The superficial layers of sand in the deserts of Africa and Arabia often become heated to 200 degs. Fahrenheit to a depth of several inches. The air resting on this hot sand becomes also greatly heated, thus causing ascending currents. As a result of these air flows in from all sides, and different currents meeting cyclones are formed, which are swept onward by the wind prevailing at the time. Since the temperature of the air, originally high, is still further raised by the heated grains of sand with which it is loaded it rapidly increases to a most intolerable degree. In the shade it has been known to reach 126 degs. It is to the parching dryness of this wind, its glowing heat and its choking dust, and not as is sometimes supposed, to any poisonous qualities it possesses that its destructive effects on animal life are to be ascribed. The effects of sandstorms are most terrible, large caravans being frequently overwhelmed and destroyed by them. It was by their agency that the armies of Cambyse and Sennacherib were annihilated.—Brooklyn Eagle.
