

Life from Living?

That depends upon the liver. If the liver is inactive the whole system is out of order—the breath is bad, digestion poor, head dull or aching, energy and hopefulness gone, the spirit is depressed, a heavy weight exists after eating, with general despondency and the blues. The liver is the housekeeper of the health; and a harmless, simple remedy that acts like nature, does not require constant taking, does not interfere with business or pleasure during its use, makes Simmons Liver Regulator a medical perfection.

I have tested its virtues personally, and know that for dyspepsia, biliousness, and throbbing headache, it is the best medicine the world ever saw. Have tried fifty other remedies before Simmons Liver Regulator, and none of them gave more than temporary relief, but the regulator not only relieved but cured.

FAMILY GRAVEYARDS.

Lonesome Spirits That Are to Be Seen on Southern Indiana Farms.

"There is no place like southern Indiana for graveyards," said William Yakov, of Bloomfield. "Now, that section including Green, Monroe, Brown and Sullivan counties is a wonderland to traverse. It looks as though the old settlers of fifty years ago wanted each one to have a graveyard of his own. Every mile or two, often far from any roadway, totally inaccessible to wagons without laying waste the fences, you come upon little rock walled or rail fenced inclosures containing the dead of one family. Father, mother and several children lie there, and none others.

"These places have long been for sale and forgotten. Weeds flourish in profusion and hide the wind and rain stained tombstones from view. Often with a companion I have entered one of those little inclosures, trampled and torn out the weeds and righted the five or six headstones that had fallen and buried even the inscribed virtues of the dead into the worny earth.

"These people had no country churchyard; no preacher except the visiting person who came monthly on horseback. They had no funeral in the present sense of the word. Plain wooden boxes were used for coffins and often the sturdy youth of the family made the coffin for the dead parent or relative. These little spots were dear to those families. One can see that by the loving little inscriptions and decorations. When they were all dead no one remained to care for them and they fell into decay and ruin.

"They are lonesome sights those little groups of white pillars. In the winter when the trees are bare and the grass dead I have seen flocks of crows coming and circling about the clump of trees that usually cluster about those places. The bitter wind moans through the cracking branches, and those crows wheel about and caw and croak until the world seems truly a place of sorrow and death."—Chicago Globe.

An Impressive Funeral.

Mr. S. C. Hall, in his "Memories," describes the burial of the poet Campbell in Westminster abbey. Statesmen, poets and men of letters followed the venerable dean of St. Paul's, the poet Millman, as, reading the burial service, he led the solemn procession to Poet's corner. It was not, however, the presence of these illustrious mourners that made the funeral one of the most impressive ever seen in that mausoleum of great men.

A long, reverential pause preceded the words, "Ashes to ashes, dust to dust." As they were slowly uttered, a Polish officer advanced from among the mourners and dropped upon the coffin some earth taken from the grave of Kosciuszko, the hero whose patriotism and death the poet had praised in verse. The effect was startling.

Then came the climax. "I heard a voice from heaven," read the dean, and immediately a thunderclap shook the old abbey. He paused; the mourners were thrilled. As the awful sound died away the dean finished the sentence—"they rest from their labors."

Mr. Toole's Jokes.

Mr. Toole has confessed to an interviewer that there is no truth in the rumor that he is a reformed character in the matter of practical jokes. On the contrary, he is of opinion a "a little harmless acting" of this sort off the stage "keeps one from growing old"—always remembering that practical jokes likely in the slightest degree to give pain are not fair game. Unfortunately the photographers, by making every body's features familiar nowadays, rather spoil this amusement.

"Yesterday, however," said the popular comedian, "I went to a jeweler's to buy some plates and get some amusement for some time by pretending to be the income tax commissioner, and the other day Weedon Grossmith and I went to the Tower and made an offer for the hire of the crown jewels for some private theatricals."—London News.

Filling for Cracks in the Floor.

If the boards of a bare floor do not fit perfectly, have the spaces filled with putty or with a mixture which has been often recommended of late, of newspapers soaked in a paste made of flour and water. The proportions of this are one pound of flour, three quarts of water and one tablespoonful of powdered alum. The newspapers should be torn into bits, and the whole thoroughly boiled and mixed until of the consistency of putty. It may be colored with a little of the staining mixture, and should be forced into the cracks with a knife, when it will soon become hard and dry like paper mache.—Christian Union.

A Misquoted Proverb.

Perhaps no English proverb or proverbial phrase is more frequently misquoted than the one that speaks of hitting a nail on the head. Unthinking people almost always say the "right nail," which is absurd. The joiner who hit the wrong nail would be a "duffer" indeed, but an expert hand may now and then hit his nail otherwise than fairly on the head.—Notes and Queries.

A Very Surprised Man.

The old gentleman who stuck his ear trumpet above the garden wall to hear what was going on, and received in his ear the gallon of milk which the milkman supposed he was emptying into the housemaid's pail, was a very surprised man.—Harper's Young People.

THE GAME AND THE MAN.

A Thoughtless Fellow Created Considerable Trouble with a Stick.

He was a portly and dignified business man of Oakland, and he crossed on the narrow gauge boat Encoined to San Francisco yesterday, accompanied by a stalwart oar. The boat was a little late in reaching the slip at the mole, and the passengers from three trains were waiting when the doors were opened. The man with the cane crossed the lower deck, and grasping the stair rail tucked his faithful stick under his arm and prepared to ascend.

Half way up he dropped a little parcel he held in his hand and stooped to pick it up. As he did so the iron ferrule of his cane struck the chin of a charming society belle of Oakland, who was directly behind him. There was a feminine shriek and a momentary backward movement of the crowd which caused the man with the cane to turn and look behind him, the cane traversing a semicircle about his round form as he moved. It caught a well known politician from the Bay City directly in the ear, administered a gentle tap on the cheek of a leading divine and captured the hat from the head of an indignant woman, whose vociferous protest reached the ears of the unconscious offender, who, anxious to learn if the whole crowd had gone mad, made another turn.

The cane took a downward course this time, planting its iron point gently but firmly just above the last vest button of a rising young attorney who had been just about to serve an injunction on the offending rod. Instead he executed an involuntary obeisance, and the wand of subjection passing over his head, describing a parabola that cut clean through the cloud of semilegal profanity that was beginning to impart a bluish tinge to the atmosphere, prodded the eye of one passenger, filleted playfully the nose of another and finished up its work by catching in the back hair of its original victim. There is no knowing what developments might have followed the next turn had not a quick witted passenger reached and with his hand struck down the projecting point, with a forcible injunction to the bearer to keep it down.

It took the battered passengers the whole time of the trip across to take account of the damages sustained, and when the boat reached the wharf they were still debating whether they should pitch the fool with the cane overboard.—San Francisco Call.

Present for Mr. Gladstone.

Some of the golden wedding presents in Hawarden castle are curious. There are half a dozen golden miniature axes, with various inscriptions on the blades. One ax in silver, made to serve as a pencil case, caught my fancy. It was a present from the Princess of Wales, and had on the blade the famous observation, "For axing questions." There is a close intimacy between her royal highness and Mr. Gladstone.

There are some wonderful presents of jewelry from the shah of Persia and others. On a prominent table rests a large solid gold double inkstand from the Prince of Wales, but perhaps the little gold model of an afternoon tea service from a few workmen is testimony as strong of a desire that this political king may "live for ever."

Mr. Drew says that the illumination and labor put into the addresses which Mr. Gladstone has had in his life, and which are now scattered all over Higwarden castle, must represent a sum of £5,000.—Pall Mall Gazette.

The Poet's Remark to the Lion Hunter.

Fresh interest is revived in the old anecdotes of Lord Tennyson, and among them is one of a lady of the genus "lion hunter" indigenous to English soil. She lived not far from one of Tennyson's country homes, and after pestering the poet with invitations to luncheon and dinner for months, she finally prevailed upon him to come and meet a party of friends who were "dying to know him." During the meal, while the hostess and friends stared at him and listened curiously for his words, the poet maintained a rigid silence, until, when nearly at the close, suddenly he looked about the table and said with great gravity, "I like my mutton cut in chunks." Whether the guests penetrated the sarcasm or not remains to be told.—New York Sun.

Old, but as Good as New.

When I beheld a fashionable table, set out in all its magnificence, I fancy I see gouts and dropsies, fancies and lethargies, with other innumerable distempers, lying in ambuscade among the dishes. Nature delights in the most plain and simple diet. Every animal but man keeps to one dish. Herbs are the food of this species, fish of that and flesh of a third. Man feeds upon everything that comes in his way. Not the smallest food or excess of earth, scarce a berry or mushroom, can escape him.—Addison.

ARTIFICIAL PRODUCTION OF LIFE.

Will the Chemist Ever Be Able to Do What Nature Has Done?

Will chemistry ever be able to produce living albumen capable of actively performing the part of a leaven, and endowed with sufficient instability to go through all the modifications that permit the combinations, splittings and demotions that lead to dissimilation and excretion? It seems to me that we are permitted to hope for it. But within what limits will this power of the chemist be exercised? Will he ever be able to make a living being? Will he succeed in making even a simple cell, a grain of starch, a muscular fiber, or any shapely and differentiated element? In order to answer these questions we must dispense some confusion and present all the elements of the problem.

To ask the chemist to make directly a differentiated being, or even a muscular fiber, a nervous cell, a grain of starch, is to ask him to do what nature herself has probably never been able to do, and what it is probably impossible to realize. Can one in good faith exact so much? Is it not enough to ask the chemist to be as powerful as nature? The question is then reduced to, Will the chemist be able to do what nature has done? Let us see what nature has done, looking from the evolutionist's point of view.

If the living form of matter was ever born by virtue of the action of natural forces, the event must have taken place in a medium the conditions of which differed from the existing conditions of our globe, for such formation of natural matter does not seem to be realized among us. Under these special conditions of the medium living matter must have appeared in the most simple, the most rudimentary condition, for beginnings are always humble and little differentiated.

We can conceive nothing of this kind more simple than droplets, more or less minute, of a substance comparable with albumen or protoplasm—that is, a rent of vital exchanges to be established within it.—Armand Sabatier in Popular Science Monthly.

Where Gladstone Belongs.

Gladstone is reported as saying in an address: "I am a Scotchman by blood, and a Lancashire man by birth. I have lived most of my life in London, and in one way or another I belong to most parts of the country."

The leading theologians of the world, who have been figuring from Scriptural and other data for some time, have come to the conclusion that Christ was crucified shortly after 9 o'clock on the morning of Friday, April 10, A. D. 30.—St. Louis Republic.

Can Any One Account for This?

An Auburn physician in his many years of practice has noted that few people are born on the 17th of the month. He was born that day himself, and being of an observing turn of mind he has taken particular notice.—Leicester Journal.
