FONDNESS FOR ANTICLIMAX. A Few of Many Examples Cited in the East and the West.

One of the most laughable figures about Rudyard Kipling's sketches of East Indians, and one of the truest to life, say those who have lived in India, is the strong tendency the natives have to use the most startling anticlimaxes in their formal speeches to one another, more especially when a native of low caste or great poverty petitions a European for a favor.

Will the presence, whose reputation for justice is known from east to west, and whose countenance spreads joy among his inferiors, who are as the sands of the sea, and number, graciously deign to take but an instant's notice of him who has the almost delirious honor to name himself one of the most noteworthy among the servants of the protector of the poor, and will the favorite son of the lord of the universe magnanimously overlook my amazing presumption in asking him for the payment of a bill of two annas for hen feed?

This sort of thing is not unknown in this country among the people who aim at a grandiloquent manner of speech and whose sense of the ridiculous is not highly developed. Courts presided over by unlettered judges are especially prolific of examples. For instance, a police justice is reported to have sought to arouse a sense of shame in the breast of a burly negro prisoner in this way: "Prisoner at the bar! An all-wise and all-merciful Providence has endowed you with an intelligent mind and a powerful physique, instead of which you spend your days in playing craps and your nights in robbing clotheslines!"

At another time the same justice sought to impress upon a prisoner who was about to testify in his own behalf the solemn nature of an oath. Assuming his most pompous tone, he thus addressed the culprit: "Prisoner at the bar, in taking this solemn oath to tell the truth—the whole truth and nothing but the truth—take care that you do not allow yourself to be tempted by the danger of your position to commit a willful perjury. Remember that the eyes of the all-seeing Providence and of the village constable are upon you!"

Another judge in a rough and ready but highly ambitious frontier town, in commenting severely upon the heinous crime of horse stealing, thundered forth: "For century after century that dread command, 'Thou shalt not steal' has rolled along the ages. It is, moreover, a standing rule of this court if not a bylaw of our progressive and soon to be incorporated city!"—New York Tribune.

Lucky People. There is one thing on which we may congratulate ourselves—we who are little—we who have escaped the penalties of greatness. That is something. We may at least call our souls our own. We may have a taste for onions, raw or fried or baked or boiled or anyhow, and yet the world shall not wonder at the grossness of our appetites. I saw in an Australian journal the other day that a certain English actress has a taste for porter. We may thank our stars, we little ones, that the fact of our having a taste for porter is not flashed around the electric circles of the globe. Smith, who passes his days soaking at the bar of the "Tyrone's Trust," may congratulate himself that he belongs to the family of the unknown Smiths. Nobody cares how much he soaks except his wife and family. Smith cares nothing for what they think.

Here, in a French paper lying on my side, is recorded the fact that a well known politician is compelled to wear a particular kind of boot, owing to a peculiarly troublesome corn which he has on his big toe. Great Harry! Think if the eyes of the world—those million Argus eyes—were on the corn on my big toe. All the Year Round.

He Knows Now. Sampson was clerk for one of the only at the mammoth establishments of William Bobson & Smokes. Bobson is very wealthy and more generous. He was writing a letter, when he looked up and asked Sampson, Jennings, who was at the next desk: "How do you spell indomitable with a 'c' or an 's'?" "Be'and'fino," responded the clerk.

All the clerks I ever had saw you know how to spell." "So did all the masters I ever had," replied Jennings. "There's a new man at the desk now,"—Yankee Blade.

ED. JOURNAL. In your last issue it is said that the best way for Republican's to prepare for the campaign of 1893 is to do right now. The same rule should apply to all classes of people.

Governor Penney makes use of some good thoughts especially of a law to exempt homesteads from execution and attachment. It is very much needed; it would put a check to some extent to storekeepers. The poor people in place of going to the store for credit he would go to his neighbor for flour or meal and work to pay for the same. THE CAPITAL JOURNAL should urge the want of such a law.
