PHYSIOGNOMY.

A dry eye means a hard heart. Brown eyes are the most kindly.

Any marked peculiarity of countenance indicates some peculiarity of mind. A prominent nose and bold chin are the most favorable combination known to the physiognomist.

Eyes which show the whole of the pupil are often observed in restless, passionate, half simple people.

A temple with strongly marked fullness in the upper part belongs to a man of great native prudence.

Men with noses that when viewed in profile appear arched are usually witty and clever in conversation.

Horizontal eyebrows, full and regular, show great understanding, deliberation and capacity for planning and execution.

Harsh, unyielding persons generally have high foreheads, knobby noses, sunken eyes, firmly closed mouths and broad chins.

Black, sparkling eyes, with a steady, grave mouth, show taste, elegance, sound judgment and often an ungenerous disposition.

Large noses are invariably associated with strong traits of character, whether good or bad is determined by other characteristics.

Wide open, staring eyes belong to people who are dull, but pretentious; who mistake impudence for wit and insolence for candor.

A face which does not change expression in conversation indicates either caution or stupidity, according to its other characteristics.

A concited man is apt to walk with the lower part of his face thrown out; a man of wisdom and modesty with the lower part drawn in, the forehead meantime inclined forward.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Cape Colony is the natural habitat of the largest known species of earth worm. It is a soft, scaleless thing between six and seven feet long, and much resembles our common angle worm.
