"GET UP." "Get up!" the caller calls. "Get up!" And in the dead of night. To win the battle their bits and sup I flash weary night.

A MYSTERY.

In a cheerless apartment on the sixth floor of a New York tenement one cold, bleak November night sat a young woman, whose face bore evident marks of intelligence and refinement.

Two small rooms comprised the narrow domain to which she gave the name of home. Their cheerlessness was increased by the absence of everything except the most necessary furniture and by the walling wind, which found entrance at a hundred crevices...

Soon after their marriage the regiment in which he was a lieutenant was ordered to India. The young man resigned his commission, and untraced as he was in any business or profession found himself at 25 thrown on the world without a penny and a young wife to support.

This money was accepted. The young couple went to Paris, where he soon plunged into the most luxurious life of that gay city. Though a man of generous impulses and a loyal and affectionate husband, Robert had an unfortunate passion for gambling.

After weary weeks spent in futile efforts to obtain work, the little family, which had been increased by the birth of a daughter, drifted from moderately comfortable lodgings to this cheerless tenement house.

Night after night she was kept awake by anxious fears and suspicions. If she could but know his destination, comprehend his work, but not being able to fathom the mystery her imagination pictured the near approach of even greater misfortunes than those to which she was already accustomed.

The child, turning uneasily in its little crib, began to cry. Victoria took a tin cup from the stove and gave its contents to the baby. It was the last drop of milk, the last morsel of food she had.

Toward morning Robert returned, evidently very tired, and was surprised to find his wife still awake. Throwing himself on the poor cot near the wall he was soon fast asleep.

It had been Robert's custom to give her a little money every week, which she had accepted in silence, neither asking for it nor questioning the cause of which she knew too well, and then came the dull misery of remembering that there was no money to buy provisions for breakfast.

"He is not," answered Victoria. "Can you tell me when or where I will find him?" "I cannot," replied the wife. "Will you not leave your message with me?" "I regret," said the visitor polit-dull season, and the little work she had on hand could not be finished for several days. The clock in a neighboring steeply had just struck 9, when, in answer to a knock at the door, a letter was handed her addressed to "Robert Desmond, Esq."

Recognizing the handwriting of Robert's father, she placed the letter on the table where her husband could find it when he awoke, then busied herself for a time about the poor apartment trying to make it seem a trifle less uncomfortable before turning again to her sewing.

Her suspicions of his associates were confirmed. What repulsive companions he must have if the man who brought the note was one of them! Toward evening Robert awoke. He found in his pockets a few cents, which he gave to Victoria to buy food with.

Victoria, again left alone, reflected still more on his mysterious occupation. She longed to follow him, but could not leave her child, and even if she could what good would come of playing the spy?

Through my banker I send you £100. More will follow should it be possible for you to make suitable business connections with the first installment. I thought you unworthy of trust after you had brought misfortune and disgrace upon wife and child by indulging your passion for gambling.

"Too late," sobbed Victoria; "this help is of no use now." Then the thought came to her, "Robert will now have means to escape." He had not yet been home. Perhaps he had left the city and was wandering about lonely, hungry, cold, without shelter or money.

"How is his hand?" "It is better, I think." "Oh, well, then he's all ready for work again, isn't he? We are short of help just now, and the boss told me to come around and ask how he was."

"Come in and sit down," Victoria continued eagerly. "Tell me how all this happened to my husband." "Well," said the man, seating himself, "we got one of them new fangled sweepin machines which is drawn by horses. Last night one of the horses stumbled, became frightened and jumped in among the men who sweep and shovel the dirt."

Victoria offered her hand to the man in perfect silence and escorted him to the crib. She felt impelled to press the child to her heart, but the strain had been too great. Her limbs failed to support her, and she fell fainting upon the floor.

"Can you forgive me for doubting you?" said Victoria, looking up into his face, "for being so wanting in faith as to suppose you were a—?" "Not another word," he cried, lifting his baby on his lap and drawing his wife closer in a fervent embrace. —Home and Country.

ly, "that I cannot do so. My business is of a private nature. I will call again." He turned away. Victoria listened breathlessly until he reached the foot of the stairs; then she turned frantically to the crib and clasped her baby close to her breast.

Overcome by the strain she sank to the floor in a swoon. When she awoke, she was surprised to find her husband gone. For the moment she thought only of him and was glad that their humble lodgings would not be the scene of his arrest.

"You are his wife, are you not?" "I am." "I come from B— Bros.," he continued, naming one of the largest banking houses in the city. "Quite a sum of money has been deposited in our London house to your husband's credit, and we would like to have him call at the office."

"The stranger bowed and retired. Victoria hardly knew whether she was awaking or dreaming. The earl must have sent money, she thought; but it was "too late—too late now," she passionately cried.

Mr. John Hungerford Proprietor of the fine livery stable at the West End hotel, Elmira, N. Y., says: "I have found that Hood's Sarsaparilla in every respect goes way ahead of anything I ever took for kidney and liver troubles, from which I have suffered a good deal during the past year or two."

Other members of my family have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla for general debility and for purifying the blood, and have been highly gratified at the good it has done them. I always feel safe in recommending it to my friends."

At this season nearly every one needs a good medicine to purify the blood and expel the impurities which have accumulated during the winter. Hood's Sarsaparilla is so well adapted for this purpose that it is beyond comparison as a medicine. It expels every trace of Scrofula and humor from the blood, and imparts new life and vigor.

When other preparations fail. It is Peculiar to itself in positive medicinal merit. HOOD'S PILLS Cure all Liver ills without pain. They are purely vegetable.
