Pacific Coast Literary Review.

[New Books and Periodicals Reviewed in this Department for Publication in the DAILY and WEEKLY Editions of the CAPITAL JOURNAL.]

Wm. Black begins a new serial in June Harper's monthly, "The Handsome Humes." As in most of his work, we are made acquainted with all the refinements of highbred English upperclass life. The subject and its treatment promise well.

The publication of another volume of the late George William Curtis's Harper's "easy chair" essays recalls the fact that his place has not yet been filled on that Magazine. Probably no one in the old or new world could be found to fit into that niche, carved out by Curtis, unless it were Oliver Wendell Holmes and he was too old.

The June overland monthly contains "The American Private Soldier," by Lieutenant Alvin H. Sydenham, U. S. A. It is an inside view of army life, illustrated from sketches made by the daughter of Major McCrea. The writer is well known at Salem.

ELIZABETH — CHRISTIAN SCIENTIST.

It is somewhat surprising that Chas. L. Webster & Co., New York, publishers of standard literature, should publish as one of their Webster library such a work as "Elizabeth, Christian Scientist," by Miss Matt Crim, author of a "Fair Rebel." It is one of the first concessions of a great publisher to a teaching still unknown to the multitude, opposed by the orthodox and accepted by the few. The publishers announce that the true aims and spirit of Christian science are set forth in a manner calculated to do away with many false impressions. It would be interesting to know to what extent so gifted a writer can throw her soul into these types without becoming a convert to the truths she depicts so convincingly to others. If it be the truth to Miss Matt Crim that she is dealing in, then it follows that the writer will not give herself to any other literary work in future, but become a second Mrs. Eddy for this cause. The library form of this edition will render it very popular. Paper 50 cents, cloth $1.00.

Hamlin Garland writes on "Pacific Coast literature" in the San Francisco Call: "I saw children moving along to school in the shadow of the most splendid peaks. I saw a youth plowing. Behind him was a row of palms, against which he stood like a figure of bronze in relief. I saw young men and maidens walking down aisles of green and crimson pepper trees, and the aisles led to blue, silhouetted mountains. I saw men herding cattle, where the sun beat with hot radiancy, and strange cacti held out wild arms. I saw children playing about cabins, setting at defiance with their shouts the illimitable width and sunless depth of the Oregon forest." Perhaps among these he saw a novelist or artist of the future.

The June issue of Jenness Miller Illustrated Monthly is replete with entertaining features. There is an endless amount of good reading for both men and women. One of the most interesting articles describes a visit to Sir Frederick Leighton. There are stories, poems, fashions and articles describing dainty work for women in summer.

A novelty in magazine literature is to be introduced by S. S. McClure, who has secured for the June issue of his magazine a real dialogue between W. D. Howells and Professor Boyesen. Mr. Howells and Professor Boyesen have been intimate friends for more than twenty years, and in this dialogue Mr. Howells tells much that is new about his early home, his newspaper correspondence work in Venice, and his attempts on his return from abroad to secure a footing in journalism and literature. The same issue of the magazine contains eight portraits of Mr. Howells taken at different periods of his life.

IN THE CONFESSIONAL.

The Western Author's Publishing Society, Murphy building, San Francisco, is a co-operative association for publication and sale of new works. The house sends us "In the Confessional," and other stories by Gustav Adolph Danziger. They are excellent in life and dramatic presentation. The author has developed the crisp daily journalism style of writing to a high degree. The co-operative plan of publishing proposed by this firm is apparently quite feasible. Future publications of this society and the success of these works on the market will be watched with interest.

"Some Little Neighbors and their Homes," is a modest volume of sixteen sketches of animals and insects familiar to nearly everyone. To write the main facts of natural history in a manner interesting to children implies a love for both and a life for both. This has been the main qualification of Adelaide C. Fitch and Rachel A. Conner of Scranton, Pa. The active imagination of childhood wants just such wholesome food. We would see more Caesars in all walks of life if there were more of such on childhood's mental bill of fare. There is no vicious contamination from nature or the society of animals. More people need to learn this and should get this book.

Worthington's Illustrated Magazine for June, opens with a very interesting paper entitled, "Random Notes on Hawaiian Life," by C. T. Rogers, M. D., a prominent physician, now and for many years a resident of Honolulu.

The June number is rich in well-written leading articles of timely interest, in short stories, essays and poems, while the charming illustrations, beautifully reproduced, and the fine press work, render it as satisfactory to the eye as it is refreshing and stimulating to the mind. It is, in fact, to our mind, the best number of a Magazine that has been exceptionally attractive and and interesting from the start.

Along with other literary fads, a full-fledged Mahommetan church paper has been established in New York.

Chicago Special to the Oregonian: Amalie Hofer, managing editor of the Chicago Kindergarten Literature Co., a sister of the editor of the Salem JOURNAL, called at the Oregon horticultural pavilion today and pronounced it the best display of fruits at the fair.

Alexander Russell Webb, who has recently returned from diplomatic service in India, has begun publication of "The Moslem World," 458 West 20th street, New York. It is a beautiful paper, style of Harper's Weekly, and devoted to a propaganda of the Mohammetan religion, to which its editor has become a convert.

The catalogue of Stanford University just received has kindergarten work in the educational course. No preparation for teaching is considered at all complete without a knowledge of the Froebel methods with children.

THE WIZARD OF LETTERS.

Hawthorne was a Salem boy—that older Salem in Massachusetts. Chance acquaintance with great men in his boyhood gave him the friendship afterwards of a president—Pierce, who sent him abroad and that made a literary career possible. He occupied three public offices, guager, postmaster and consul to Liverpool. This withdrew him much from his chosen life task of letters. But it gave him a literary competence aside from the financial sense. How this all came about is related in an artistic volume of personal recollections by his classmate, Horatio Bridge, a retired paymaster general of the U. S. Navy. Harper & Brothers, New York.

"RAFTMATES."

The same firm issue Kirk Munroe's work by the above title, a story of adventure and boy life on the great Mississippi. It is amply illustrated and bound in beautiful gift book style. Like the other volumes by this writer, it is clean and wholesome literature for young and old, especially suitable for society or public libraries. Lifelike and realistic in all its details, "Raftmates" is destined to become a classic in the homes of millions who are familiar with the peculiarities of river commerce, the romance of steamboating, rafting and all the strange craft there afloat. All this has evidently become familiar to the author from actual experience.

There is at least one Brooklyn man who sends his laundry to be "done up" in London. Strange to say, he is not a dude, but a prosperous merchant.

The Stone Fights of Corea.

The stone fights of Corea are a remarkable national sport. The kite flying, which is universal in Corea, stops on the 15th of their first month, and next day the stone fights take its place. The most serious fights occur on the large open spaces of the capital. There is a sort of recognized pitting of one section of the city against another, but there is no organization and no leaders, though the fighters generally follow the lead of the more daring and reckless of their number.

Stones fly in an incessant shower, and each man tries to hit as many men as he can, and specially to avoid being hit by stones aimed at him. A few men on each side are armed with strong clubs and provided with wadded hemlets, and these come to the closer quarters required for blows, while the main body ply the missiles. The excitement is intense, and thousands of spectators crowd the neighboring safe points.

The villages round the capital are in a constant state of warfare with each other during the season, and broken heads are plentiful. In fact, it was reported that in the first fight of last year six men were killed—a record which nearly equals one of our own good football seasons—and a company of soldiers which was ordered out to stop it could hardly do so even with fixed bayonets.—London Tit-Bits.

Defensive Instinct In Monkeys.

Some forms of the defensive instinct have become curiously specialized. The little capuchin monkeys of the Brazilian forests are so timid that they scamper away at the mere rustling of a leaf, but experience has taught them that flight offers no chance of salvation from the pursuit of a winged enemy, and at the first glimpse of a harpy eagle a swarm of capucinos will huddle together and shriek out their defiance with an emphasis that really makes the hovering murderer reconsider his project.

If he does risk a swoop, a dozen pair of hands will grab him at once, and clutching at his throat and his wings soon fill the air with a whirl of flying feathers not unmixed with fur, while the screams of the combatants bring up ringtailed allies from all parts of the woods till the would be assassin is glad to get away with the loss of half his plumage.—San Francisco Chronicle.

From Boston to Chicago Fifty Years Ago.

A gentleman informs us that 50 years ago he left Boston for a trip to Chicago. He left the Boston and Worcester station at 7 a. m., arriving in Albany the same day. The New York Central was not then in operation, and eight days, at an expense of $5 each for fare and board, was spent upon the Erie canal between Albany and Buffalo. From Buffalo the rest of the trip was made via the great lakes, the traveler reaching Chicago in 21 days from Boston. Upon his arrival there was a comparative wilderness, with land salable at $1.25 per acre in what is now the heart of the World's fair city.—Boston Journal.

How He Found the Missing Heir.

A Mayville (N. Y.) lawyer in search of a missing heir became satisfied at last that the man he wanted was somewhere in Canada, but not knowing where he addressed a letter to him at every postoffice in Ontario and Quebec, nearly 4,600 of them in all. One of the letters reached the addressee, and as his inheritance was more than $100,000 he probably won't object to the item "Postage, $92," in the lawyer's little bill.—Chicago Herald.

That Paderewski Anecdote.

"Think of the money Paderewski took away from America with him," remarked a woman looking up from a newspaper. "And when he was a young fellow he was so bitterly poor that they say his wife nearly starved to death."

"If that's so," was her husband's rejoinder, "why didn't Paderewski nearly starve to death too?" — Philadelphia Press.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the deceased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.
