A SCENE FROM REAL LIFE.

Divorce Suit, Lawyer, Woman—Some Money, Etc.

These were the component parts of a domestic tragedy, one act of which was carried out at the Southern Pacific passenger depot this morning. The parties arrived yesterday on the California overland and bought tickets for Portland. The two men, one an elderly lawyer, the other a young man who looked as if he had been monkeying with several distinct species of buzzsaw, the matrimonial one included, got into the forward seats of the smoker.

The woman climbed into the rear seat of the day coach. The parties in repose seemed to want to get as far apart as possible. In action the woman shadowed the men very closely. She was a solid looking brunette, with a battle-axe style of nose, rather handsome, inclined to embonpoint and a hustler generally.

They would not talk only among themselves. A reporter asked him if he was an architect bidding on the reform school. He was not. He looked as if he would like to own an interest in a penitentiary and have the say as to who should be put into it.

The woman was unapproachable to a reporter. By working among hotel runners, porters, expressmen, and depot loafers it was learned the blond young man dressed in stylish brown clothes had been engaged in several alterations with the pretty determined looking woman in blue. They had been married two years. He had considerable money. Wanted a divorce. She would not let him go without a share of his pile. He called her a designing woman. The lawyer, she said, was separating them. She seemed a match for both.

The woman evidently was fighting her battle singlehanded against a lawyer and a discarded husband with a pile of money. It is to be hoped she will prove a match for the three worst things a woman ever had to contend with when united against her.

The Mythological Fates.

"Somewhere upon the unknown shore, Where the streams of life their waters pour, There sit three sisters, evermore Weaving a silken thread."

Lovers of classic paintings are familiar with that famous group, called the "Three Fates." Fate seems cruel when it deprives women and girls of health. But in Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription they find a cure of untold value for nervous prostration, sick headache, bearing-down pains, bloating, weak stomach, introversion, retroversion, and all those excruciating complaints that make their lives miserable. All who use it praise it. It contains no hurtful ingredients and is guaranteed to give satisfaction in every case, or its price, $1.00, will be refunded.

HE GAINED HIS FREEDOM.

But Has Lost the Affections of His Wife Forever.

To the following record in the office of the executive hangs a bit of a tale: W. W. Ward, who was sentenced to a term of three years and four months in the penitentiary for assault with a dangerous weapon in Clatsop county was granted a full pardon by Governor Penney on recommendation of the judge and jury that tried him.

Mrs. Ward has labored incessantly to procure a pardon for her husband. She has travelled to procure testimony, labored with officers and courts, and at last achieved her triumph, when she secured the pardon papers and was driven in a hack to the prison.

She handed Ward the pardon through the bars of the state prison and said in a cool voice: "That sets you free. But I never want to see your face again." She turned almost fainting, rushed out of the prison to a carriage, and was driven to Turner just in time to catch the train. Ward boarded the same train at Salem for the East.

Mrs. Ward is a fine looking woman and his sentence was the result of a shooting affair over Mrs. Ward.

Senator Stanford's Regard For His Horses.

In employing men to work at Palo Alto the late senator gave them the most strict orders. They were told never to strike, kick or whip a horse, and his instructions to his men were: "Always do a thing a little better than anybody else, and you will succeed. When you handle a horse, treat him a little better than any one else. When you breed a horse, breed him to a little better stock each time."

It was in this way that Stanford revolutionized the horse breeding of the country. He never allowed one of his men to ill use a horse, and they knew it. There is never noise or blows around the Palo Alto stables, and the horses are never frightened. To show his feeling toward his horses the late Henry Vrooman once told of an occurrence when he was dining with Senator Stanford. Just after the dinner one of the drivers insisted that he must see the senator. He was ushered in, with blood over his face, which was badly cut. "John knocked me down," explained the man, referring to one of the trainers.

"What did you do?" asked the senator. "Nothing," replied the man. "But you must have done something. I want the truth," persisted the senator. "I kicked a horse, and John knocked me down," said the man.

"Those were John's instructions, and I think he did just right," said the senator. —San Francisco Examiner.

Color in the World's Fair Buildings.

The choice of an "off white" for the basis of the decorative plan of the fair was in the last degree felicitous—primarily because it offers the best field for the animating wizardry of the sun and because it shows to the best advantage the beauties of architectural and sculptural ornament with which the buildings have been enriched, but also because it gives better relief than any other tone could give to the floating gonzalons on the cornices, to the turf, to the floral decorations everywhere, to the vegetation in the lagoon and finally to the stream of pedestrians which moves ceaselessly beneath the shadow of the mammoth buildings.

Just because it does give such strong relief to any darker tints coming into contact with it, it is important for such of the latter as are comprehended in the painted decoration to be manipulated with taste. I think they have been, in the main, in the buildings on the Court of Honor. In that one of them, for example, which stands as the head and front of the exhibition—the Administration building—the glimpses of color caught between the columns of the loggia in the second stage of the composition are of a character to heighten perceptibly the effect of the total scheme and yet remain in the subordinate position which belongs to the recessed walls on which the decoration is laid. This wall is painted a dull red.

Seen from the ground, the roof of the loggia throws a deep shadow behind the columns supporting it, but so large in scale is the building that even at a distance the color actually counts and is as distinct a factor in the beauty of the structure as are the white surfaces from the ground to the wall above the loggia or the gilded splendor which thence up to the crown of the dome is the most dazzling mark on the horizon.—Royal Cortissoz in Century.

A Mistake Somewhere. Willis (lighting a cigar)—As a rule, the last half of a cigar is always bad. Wallace—Then you must be smoking that one backward.—Brooklyn Life.

There is more catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address, F. J.
