EVENING CAPITAL JOURNAL, TUESDAY, AUGUST 1, 1893.

The wise mother will teach her childrep without their suspecting that they are learning lessons. The charm of "Little Red Riding Hood" and "The Three Bears" may be equaled by true stories of the wonders that lis all about us. These have revealed themselves to many patient, sympathetic observers who have recorded their observations for our benefit, so that we have only to profit by their labors. The fairyland of science has domains as fascinating as anything in the extensive realms of fiction. Why not make the children free of it? Tell them of the habits of birds and plants and animals; of the wonderful snow crystals and the black diamonds of the coal. It is not difficult to begin: it is only difficult to know where to stop. The supply of subjects is inexhaustible.

As we watch the development of the active, intelligent minds, we feel the importance of supplying them with food that shall nourish as well as amuse them. It seems a pity that the retentive memories, on which it is now so easy to make an indelible impression, should not have imprinted upon them facts of real interest and value. These may be told at first in the simplest language and illus-trated by reference to familiar things. Children are full of curiosity; all their surroundings are new and strange. They are constantly asking questions and inquiring into the reason of everything that strikes them as being unusual. They should receive intelligent answers, explanations that will satisfy them as far as possible when the subject is really beyond their grasp. Nothing is more exasperating to the inquiring mind than to be told, "You While traveling on the Gold Coast cannot understand that now; you must of Africa H. H. J. Do Babies Talk to One Another?

Do babies talk to one another? Whoever has watched an assemblage of young babies left freely to themselves as they are sometimes when several little carriages are drawn close together while their mothers are shopping or their nurses gossiping would be inclined to give an affirmative answer to this question. In a certain large shop in New York there is an antechamber used by mothers to station the carriages of their little ones while they transact their business inside. The writer has counted over a dozen of these equipages drawn up side by side, so that the tiny occupants had every opportunity to exchange civilities. A boy

Who that is old enough cannot recall the story of the baggage master and the circus man's snake? The circus man's trunks, in will be remembered, had been at one time and another pretty roughly handled, and so one day he got a rather flimsy trunk and put in it a boa con strictor 22 feet long, and he marked on the outside of the trunk: 'Don't break! Asking John Sherman a Question.

There is a story that was told when Secretary Sherman ran the treasury department. A young woman worked in one of the branches of Mr. Sherman's establishment. She had a brother in the war department. Secretary Sherman had an idea that reform was necessary in the family, and he sent for the girl.
