Mr. J. H. Stillman
I am Truly Thankful
For Hood's Sarsaparilla. In the war I contracted typhoid fever and fever and ague, leaving me with malaria and mercantile poisoning from which I have suffered ever since.

DYSPEPSIA

Is that misery experienced when suddenly made aware that you possess a diabolical arrangement called stomach. No two dyspeptics have the same predominant symptoms, but whatever form dyspepsia takes

The underlying cause is in the LIVER, and one thing is certain no one will remain a dyspeptic who will

It will correct Acidity of the Stomach, Expel foul gases, Alay Irritation, Assist Digestion and at the same time

Start the Liver working and all bodily ailments will disappear.

For more than three years I suffered with Dyspepsia in its worst form. I tried several Simmons Liver Regulators, which cured me in a short time. It is a good medicine. I would not be without it.

THE ONE CENT DAILY is coming to be the acknowledged hop paper of this valley.

The Democratic party is not exactly the great apostle of the boom. Few things that have not been shrinking since it went into power.

It is rather late to discover that Oregon has no representative on the National Board of World's Fair Commissioners.

The Independent ought to be happy. It has at last been noticed by the Governor who says in substance that Supp. Downing has but one fault, he will not readily pounce up.

The state law says that "Out of the first monies received for taxes," the county treasurer shall pay state taxes.

Our news service is still more complete. All dispatches of the associated press received after the hour of going to press will be found on our inside pages.

GOVERNOR'S PROCLAMATION.—Governor Penney yesterday issued a proclamation calling the attention of the people of Oregon to a law passed at the last session of the legislature, which makes it punishable by a fine for any person to kindle a fire on land not his own and a misdemeanor to set fire to any wooded country or forest belonging to the state or to the United States, punishable by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

LIQUID AIR

A Successful Experiment That Verified One Made Some Years Before.

The boiling points of oxygen and nitrogen are respectively 378.8 and 556 degrees F. below the freezing point of water, and therefore these are the highest temperatures at which they can be seen as liquids. The most remarkable liquefaction which has yet been accomplished, however, is that of air. The two gases of which it is almost entirely composed are oxygen and nitrogen, and since these have different boiling points it would naturally be supposed—as it was supposed—that they would liquefy separately, the oxygen, which has the higher boiling point, first and the nitrogen afterward.

So indubitable did this reasoning appear that though a few years ago a small quantity of liquid atmospheric air was actually produced by two continental scientists they were told that they must have been mistaken and that their supposed liquid air was not air at all. The audience which was so fortunate as to witness Professor Dewar's remarkable experiments at the Royal Institution received ocular demonstration that the too confident critics were wrong. Liquid atmospheric air was produced in considerable quantities, and some of it poured into a wingless and handed around for inspection.

It was at first in a state of violent ebullition, but this soon ceased and a gentle and finally almost imperceptible effervescence took its place, the liquid air being apparently in no hurry whatever to resume its ordinary gaseous condition. This was not the least striking part of a most striking experiment, for at an ordinary temperature tons of pressure to the square inch would not have retained the air in a liquid state, yet there it was in an open vessel and apparently exposed to the temperature of the lecture room, but it was apparently only.

All liquids when boiling absorb heat, and liquid air is no exception to the rule; therefore on being poured into the glass it immediately absorbed all the heat it could get from that source, and there was no other available save the immediately surrounding air, but this air was itself just given off from the liquid state and was at the low temperature of the boiling point. In consequence sufficient heat was not forthcoming to maintain ebullition, and the liquid air was compelled to evaporate with comparative deliberation.

A HISTORIC BLUNDER.

Jefferson Davis Was Once Arrested in Atlanta as a Pickpocket.

It is not generally known that Jefferson Davis was once arrested and held prisoner in Atlanta charged with being a pickpocket. In 1857 or 1858 Mr. Davis, who was then secretary of war, was traveling from Richmond to Mississippi. On the same train was Sam Noble, the founder of the big iron works in Rome and Anniston.

Mr. Noble had but recently come over from England and was on a prospecting tour. He had with him a small hand satchel containing $1,000 in gold. When Atlanta was reached, the dismay of Mr. Noble may be imagined when he found his satchel gone. He gave the alarm, and city marshal E. P. Hunnicutt and his deputy, Ben Williford, responded at once. They learned that a quiet, unassuming man had occupied the seat with Noble, and after a short search they found, placed him under arrest and carried him to Washington Hall.

The stranger took his arrest very quietly and said: "Is not Allison Nelson the mayor of your town? Well, I think if you will bring him here I can be identified."

The arrest of a person charged with picking pockets was unusual in Atlanta, and the prisoner was surrounded by a gaping, staring crowd. The mayor came, and as he crossed the threshold he glanced around the room until his eyes rested on the prisoner.

With a shout of joy, his arms outstretched, he sprang forward. "Jeff Davis, God bless your soul! Where did you come from? Gentlemen, I fought under this man in the Mexican war. He is the secretary of war."

Introductions and explanations followed. The officers began another investigation and finally recovered the money from the negro trip porter.

Messrs Hunnicutt and Williford are still alive; Mr. Noble and Mayor Nelson are dead, but there are many old men in Atlanta today who were present in Washington Hall when the affair occurred.—Atlanta Herald.

The Wait of the Tennis Player.

The Central park tennis courts are so well patronized that they cover the available ground like the squares of a checker board, and the players are almost elbow to elbow.

This has resulted in an unwritten law that every player shall "field" or throw back to its owner every ball which strays from its proper court into his court. The reply for the courtesy is invariably, "Thank you!" The next step from this was easy. Not knowing your neighbor's name three times out of a hundred you are unable to call his attention in any very graceful manner to your ball, which has rolled into his court unobserved by him.

To shout "Say!" at him or "Hi!" is not dignified. To call out "Mister!" or "Oh, mister!" is stiff. To yell, "Oh, ma'am!" is dangerous, for she may be a miss or vice versa. So players have fallen into the way in such cases of shouting, "Thank you!" with the emphasis on "you," at the same time indicating the person addressed by pointing with the racket.

The player so pointed at understands that he is being thanked in advance for returning a ball which he has not yet seen. But the absurdity comes in when the person addressed is so engrossed in his own play that he does not hear or heed the call at once, and then the petitioner comes out in imploring tones with this incongruous jumble of words: "Thank you, please! Thank you, please!"

And all over the lawn on a crowded day this queer wall sounds from morn to night: "Thank you, please! Oh, thank you, please!"—New York Herald.

Count Tolstoy's Views of Poetry.

Count Leo Tolstoy has received in Moscow a visit from an aspiring young Russian poet, who had previously sent a copy of his productions to the great romanticist and philosopher. At this interview the count said: "I have read your book, or at least the greater part of it. But I must tell you at once, and frankly, that I entertain a general dislike to all poetry, and for this reason—that it prevents one from giving a clear, intelligent and comprehensive expression to one's thoughts and ideas. Why should we laboriously strain to conform our expression to the rhythmical and metrical rules of versification when we can convey our thoughts in simple and lucid prose? It is as if, instead of permitting me the free use of my limbs, you fetter my legs and make me hobble around the object of observation."

"In order to be succinct, concise and comprehensively expressive I always strive to construct my language that every reader, even he of the scantiest intelligence, can, without the slightest trouble or reflection, at once grasp my meaning. If I wrote in verse, my primary and distracting labor would be to conform to the laws and rules of versification, and my readers would be left to sift out for themselves the thoughts and ideas I wished to convey. If I may be perfectly frank with you," said the count, with a peculiarly bitter expression on his face, "I would say that verses are generally the production of literary wantonness, literary frivolity and literary insolence."—London News.

The Mean Man Heard of.

A young fellow dining in the suburbs the other night endeavored to make himself agreeable by a succession of "good stories" which he had gathered in the city. One concerned a man (name unknown) who was so phenomenally mean that he sent half a turkey to each of his tenants at Christmas time. Afterward at home he chanced to speak of the evening and of this pleasing tale to the original teller.

"Did your audience seem interested?" he was asked. "I don't remember—not particularly, I think. Why?"

There was a malicious grin accompanying the answer, "Because your host was the mean man."—Philadelphia Press.

Sound Heard a Long Distance.

When we are so situated as to be able to confine sound waves, as in a tube or pipe, a very slight disturbance can be heard for a long distance. In the cast iron water pipe of Paris, which forms a continuous tube with only two slight crooks, and these near its middle, the lowest whisper at one end can be distinctly heard at the other, although the pipe is 8,120 feet in length. When some experiments in this line were being conducted, a pistol fired at one end of the tube actually blew out a lighted candle held at the other end and violently ejected the shavings, feathers, paper, etc., which had been placed in one end of the pipe by the experimenters.—St. Louis Republic.

Divorce in Various Countries.

A statistician who has been looking into the matter of divorce has found that the proportion of divorces to population is least of all in Ireland—only one divorce to every 400,000 inhabitants. In the United States the proportion of divorces is ominously large, 58.71 to every 100,000 of population, the largest known, in fact, save in Japan, the figures for that happy empire being 608.45 divorces to every 100,000 of population.
