SETTING A HEN.

Things to Do and Other Things to Avoid

In This Important Undertaking. Our esteemed contemporary, Uncle Sam's Live Stock Journal, utters a clarprecipitancy in setting a hen. "This is the time of year," it says, "that every one is setting hens or getting ready, and although there may be some few of us here in New York below Canal street who are neither setting hens nor getting ready to set them we have no doubt Having placed the eggs in the nest the next thing to do is to secure a hen for a three weeks' engagement. The best time for setting a hen is in the evening. Select your hen and proceed cautiously. Do not approach her with a brass band and torchlight procession, but go un-attended. Take her up tenderly and put her head under your coat. Lower her gently to the nest; never think of setting her with a pile driver. Depart quietly and say nothing about it. Do not go groping around in the darkness saying, "S-s-sh, there's a hen on!" After a brief interval go back and see if the hen is still there. If she is not, seek another hen of a more sedentary disposition. Nothing can be gained by holding her on the nest with a mushroon anchor. No harm results from picking up one of the eggs and showing it to her in a friendly and confidential way, but it is not advisable to break the eggs into a saucer to convince her that they are fresh. The period of incubation is three weeksthree consecutive weeks. If a hen thinks she can take a week out of this period to scratch up the garden, her trolley is off, and it is not worth while to temporize

Nothing is said by our esteemed contemporary about setting impatient hens on eggs that have been hatching for 20 days or so in a patent incubator; but it is easy to see how such a scheme might lead to the utter discouragement of the others of the flock who were not thus

"You will find," says our philosophic contemporary, "that hens, like people, are obstinate and differing in temperament." Hence it follows that one who becomes successful in setting hens acquires at the same time something akin to a valuable knowledge of human nature. Thus he is better equipped for the struggle of life than if he had mastered only that other lesson, necessary as the knowledge may be at times-how to break up a sitting hen.—New York Sun

A Visit to Arabi Pasha.

While in Columbo I drove into the suburbs to visit Arabi Bey, or Arabi Pasha, to give him his proper title. The political prisoner of the English government, he was allowed to dwell within the environment of Columbo, and he chose a cottage surrounded by beautiful grounds on the outskirts of the city. Here he lived quietly with some few Egyptian servants. Many travelers passing through Ceylon call on Arabi, although it appears to be in questionable taste, and I am sure the Egyptian general is bored to death, although he is too much of a gentleman to say so.

I found him a portly Arab of about 55 His demeanor was pleasant, though tinged with a weariness that he could not disguise. He conversed fluently in French and spoke but little English with considerable hesitation. He said that he tried to make life as agreeable as possible in view of all the circumstances, but that of course he pined for liberty. He hoped eventually he would get it. He did not care to talk international politics. I was not presented to Mrs. Arabi. -Donahoe's Magazine.

Strange Judgments.

Chief among the curiosities of literature must be accounted the strange judgments of men who would be sup posed to have an appreciation of what is best upon the works of others. It was no less a person than Goldsmith who observed of the poems of Milton that "they betray a narrowness of education and a degeneracy of habit," adding to this extraordinary dictum the still more audacious assertion that "there is no force in his reasonings, no eloquence in his style and no taste in his composition," Waller, an ant hill poet compared to the soaring loftiness of Milton, yet presumably a man who could reason, said of "Paradise Lost" that if its length be not considered as merit it has no other. Hume deemed Shakespeare "a disproportioned, misshapen giant," while George III, who ought to have known better, and yet, all things considered. could hardly have been expected to think otherwise, sapiently asked, "Was there ever such stuff as the greater part of Shakespeare?"—Harper's Bazar. The Power of the Press.

The awful power of the omnipotent daily paper as an engine for good or evil can hardly be overestimated. Nine men out of ten, though they will not admit it, have an almost superstitions veneration for anything in print. The city man, at lunch with a friend, delivers himself, not of his own opinions, but of those of the daily paper which he has swallowed with his breakfast, so that the political argument is not Jones versus Brown, but the leader writer of The Daily Slasher versus him of The Morning Scribbler. In a very busy age it is doubtless a great saving of time and trouble to buy an opinion ready made for a penny, but the habit is fatal to the faculty of pronouncing an independent judgment.-Chambers
