GERMANY MOVES FOR SILVER.

In line with the movement of Germany for silver as indicated in these columns from time to time, the Prussian Diet has agreed to count Von Mirbach's motion for the inauguration of a monetary conference to secure the remonetization of silver, says the Salt Lake Tribune. The vote was decisive—10 to 4. We presume the next step will be the report of this committee to the Diet and the agreement of that body to the report; then the movement will be fully launched. It is said that the German Emperor has thrown himself with his customary enthusiasm into the study of the silver question; that he talks silver all the day and dreams of it by night; and that he is rapidly forming the opinion that the agricultural interests of Germany, and the interests of the German working men, demand the remonetization of silver; and the probabilities are that this young autocrat will soon be one of the most pronounced "silver lunatics" in the world. We can see with joy the consummation of this excellent prospect. The Prussian movement for silver is, as we have hitherto shown, deep-seated and extensive. It springs from the necessities of Industrial Germany, for more money to transact the business of the country. In Germany, as in America, it is found that gold alone does not afford enough standard money to meet the demands of commerce and manufactures. Consequently the demand for restoration of silver. But there as here the bankers and usurers are standing out for the single gold standard; there is plenty of money for their uses; they want dear money and cheap products, and gold monometallism is exactly to their mind. But the indications are that in Germany as in the United States, the producers and the artisans are pulling the public sentiment their way, and the dawn of the day of relief appears. That it may spread into the open sunlight of renewed prosperity, and that Germany may push the movement to a glorious fruition, is our fervent hope.—Baker City Democrat.

THE SILVER REPUBLICANS.

The Eugene Register prints a conservative statement of the attitude of the bimetalists, or free-coining Republicans in the state convention of Republican clubs, in which this is stated:

It is a general supposition that a majority of those present were silver men to a great extent, but they understood most intelligently that the only way to bring about these results was to work on a systematic plan—to devote all the time possible to the study of the financial question—thereby lessening the possibility of making a mistake; and in accordance with this option they with one sweeping decision laid the premature silver resolution on the table to await the arrival of the proper time before action is taken.

The conservative faction would have fought the adoption of a gold resolution just as ardently as they did that of silver.

Still the Oregonian, with its monopoly of the telegraphic system, sends out to the world that the convention declared for the single gold standard and sat down upon the silver men. The fact is the silver men avoided making any speeches whatever and simply asked to go record unequivocally for what they believe in as a matter of principle and voted for free coinage regardless of large.

RELEASE BABABAS.

The Oregonian won a victory in the Republican club convention, but lost its case in the United States courts. It had been a side counsel for the defense, but the jury found Loran and held Bababas guilty, just the same—Hansburg Review.

The Oregonian is using its powerful editorial influence to get Jim Loran a new trial, or an acquittal. It is a shame that so prominent a politician and so useful a man to the Portland ring should suffer so at the hands of a vile Democratic jury, when he is no more guilty than a score more of other unscrupulous members of Portland. The drivers should be crucified, every one of them, but Loran is too valuable a man to the people. Let him be released.
